Reported Missing

A telegram has been received by Mrs. David Horton of Mt. Allison, P.E.I. on June 18 that her husband, Pte. D. L. Horton was reported missing in action in France since June 8. Dave joined the army in July of the same year. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Horton, Mt. Allison. REPORTED MISSING "Not missing from the Father's heart, Not missing from His ordered ranks; For this, through pain and bitter faith still with tears, can give Him thanks. "We cannot tell where he may be, On earth or in the heavenly light. A captive or a son set free. He still is in the Father's sight. "God sends His soldiers far away To bear the battle's strain and stress; But some He calls 'em from the fray, To rest with Him in blessedness. "And here or there they all are dear To Him; He knows them every one, And plans for earth, afar or near. Until the battle day is done. "Within His sight each son of His Remains; not one is wanting there. He laid indeed his safe; he is Not missing, but with God Somewhere." —Author Unknown.

Ellen's Diary

By An Island Farmer's Wife (Continued from page 2) When we finished the work later, James asked us what the back was to see how the crops were doing. I was too much waiting for me to get my eye, I began to make my way toward home, the sun had only sunk red in the west when I came over the "head-land" bridge, the woods, I wondered if I had a ways up the wood-road where the strawberry blossoms were sweet and sticky as spring is possibly I might find some delicious fruit. I was disappointed at first, but when I wandered further in, I found them, not fully ripened as yet, altogether delectable. I scooped around a little, finding the best patches for future examinations, then began the home-ward trek. The sun was setting now and my shoes were becoming heavily wet. I was a good deal surprised to find a good deal of dew on the ground. I had seen that dew—and James had had it in a box from what he called "crack" rather than here, in the meadow near the bridge. It made a charming picture in the calm of twilight. The sparks flew up as from a glass and the dark waters were over the top of the Adlers about the stream. A tiny new moon, with never a thin, not a power horn above the Fosters' way. Some of the dairy herd high and dark in the meadow; others rest in the pasture about them. It was indeed a lovely scene. I wish, as peace and contentment at evening. James has returned to tell me he lunched at Karolyn's. Her father, I suppose, for the sake and sounds of his home-town returned there this morning. He tells me Karolyn has acquired most cunning and he believes there was the making of a toothsome rascal being prepared while she chatted with him. It's so late I've eyed him inquisitely as he reached for his old pipe. Tomorrow across Canada, there'll be a birth-day celebrated of an anniversary great and grand. This Lady of the Snows must be skin to me for I too am one of July's children, and she wears her birthstone proudly on her bosom. In peace is the red of her maple; in this way, I think, starting her mother's burden, is the reflection of the shed blood of her young heroes for daughter is she in her mother's house—and mistress in her own!—Bless Canada! Until Monday—Diary—Good-night. SCOTS SOIL RATPROOF A Scotman received an unusual request through the post from a merchant vessel. He was asked to send to postoffice where the ship calls a boxful of earth from Rosneath, a village that nestles by the Gareloch, Dumbartonshire. The sailor explained that Rosneath was noted for the fact that its soil was ratproof and that, though rats may abound in the Gareloch district, such vermin are never found in Rosneath itself. Now the argument was started to establish if there really is anything to the claim—and why.
