arate territory since June, 1898 and since that year, the Interior Department alone has spent $10,782,000 on its development. The territory has local self-government through a federally-appointed controller and a legislative council of three elected members.

The Yukon controller administers the government under instructions from Ottawa. The Council passes ordinances on such local topics as taxes, liquor, game conservation, prison administration and marriage regulations.

What effect the change would have on parliamentary representation for the territory, has not been announced but it was considered likely the Yukon would be added to one of the northern British Columbia divisions, possibly Skeena. At the present time, the Yukon has one representative in the House, Mrs. George Black, a Conservative.

The following statement was issued today by Mrs. Black: "I have read with some surprise the announcement made by the Premier of British Columbia that an agreement had been entered into with the Government of Canada for the extension of the boundaries of British Columbia to include the Yukon Territory.

"Parliament proposed on April 10. The Prime Minister left the Dominion on Saturday last, yet no statement was made, either in Parliament or by the Prime Minister, regarding a matter over which the Parliament of Canada—and the Parliament of Canada only—has jurisdiction.

"Parliament, which includes as well the Senate as the House of Commons and the Crown, alone has power to extend the boundaries of British Columbia.

"That such an announcement should be first given to the public by the Premier of the Province affected and not by the Government of Canada is difficult to comprehend, surely the representatives of the body that alone could legislate should have made the statement; and why no reference was made to it when Parliament was in session indicates the political character of what is being done.

"Clearly, in view of what has transpired, it is the duty of the Federal Government to publish at once the agreement made with the Government of British Columbia. I shall await the publication of this agreement before making any comment."

Will Broadcast Details Of Coronation

Majesties arrive. Michael Standing will continue this preview of the scene from the annex at the Abbey and Harold Abrahams will describe the scene when the King and Queen pass the cenotaph in Whitehall and reach Parliament Square.

As the royal couple reach the Abbey and enter the annex, Blake will resume the story from Middlesex Guildhall. With him will be commentators from a number of foreign countries, whose descriptions will be transmitted to their home broadcasting stations. Countries which will be represented include Argentina, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Norway, Sweden, the United States and Yugoslavia.

Inside the Abbey, Standing will tell of the marshalling of the procession and of the "great proceeding" scene as the "great proceeding" moves slowly up the aisle, through the organ screen and on towards the high altar, and as the King passes through the west door.

As the service proceeds, Rev. F. A. Tremonger, chaplain to the King and BBC director of religion, will read and, when necessary, explain the rubrics and will offer guidance for the thoughts and prayers of listeners during that part of the Abbey service (from the end of the Sanctus to the beginning of the Lord's Prayer) which will not be broadcast.

As the service ends, Howard Marshall will picture the procession from St. Edward's Chapel to the west door and cooperate with Standing and Blake in a description of the final scene in the Abbey and the annex.

The state drive of the newly-crowned King and Queen from Westminster Abbey back to Buckingham Palace is expected to start about 1.40 p. m. Blake will continue the story as the crowds acclaim "The King and Queen."

As the procession moves from Parliament Square, four special "atmosphere" microphones will tell the story by reproducing the sounds. These microphones, spaced at intervals of about eight minutes, will be at the Victoria Embankment end of Horse Guards Avenue, in Trafalgar Square near the statue of King Charles I, on the roof of St. James Palace and on the balcony of a building in Piccadilly Circus.

As the procession approaches Constitution Hill from Hyde Park, Thomas Woodroffe, from an observation post close to the quadrangle surrounding Wellington Arch, will describe it from the beginning to end as it goes past. Snagge will conclude the description of the scene from his post in the Green Park near the Palace.

It is expected the broadcast will end between 3.30 and 4.00 p. m.

THEY CERTAINLY ARE THE CAT'S PYJAMAS!

SAINT JOHN, N. B., April 27—Molly, male despite the name, is quite a tomcat. For eight years he has paraded the decks of the S. S. Philip T. Dodge. Atlantic crossings by the ship's sleek mascot total more than 80.

Molly wears a dainty collar with tiny bells and an engraved plate. Everywhere that Molly goes the bells are sure to tinkle. But his pride is the cat's pyjamas—literally. Carefully tailored and comfortable, they give Molly's tail a 360-degree leeway.

He has a pillow in the captain's bunk and things equivalent to slippers. Molly once owned a pair of spectacles and hat for formal occasions. Framed photographs of the mascot adorn the captain's desk. Molly likes the radio, and a ladder was built from the floor to the top of the cabinet.

The Philip T. Dodge is the only foreign-going freighter registered at this port. When last here Molly was nearing another birthday, subject of annual observation aboard the ship.

JOYS

What are the things that give men the keenest joy? Precisely the things which belong to no one: such as national glory, the greatness of the past, the supreme works of poetry, remembrance of noble deeds, the sea, the virgin plain, the forest, the desert, and the snowy peaks of mountains.

It's a common sight to see the mascot following the skipper and pacing the bridge. Molly, once left the ship at Three Rivers, Que., and the entire crew as well as 120 stevedores scurried over the waterfront in search of him just before sailing time. Only the port doctor could wheedle him back aboard.

Island Missionaries In San Salvador

The following letter speaking of missionary work in San Salvador, C. A., was received by Mr. Russell Rogers of Coleman from Rev. A. Roy MacNaught, who is a son of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. MacNaught of Coleman, P. E. I.

Apartado 394, San Salvador, C. A., March, 1937.

Dear friends: Greetings in the name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ to whom be the praise and honor now and forever more.

We realize that it is not very "thrilling" to receive a general letter; it is much more interesting to get a personal one. That is quite true. But there does not seem to be any other way for us to communicate with all those who have written to us, who are praying for us, who have helped us, than by the much-used "general letters". Our duties seem to multiply each year and in the tropics one's strength must not be overtaxed, so we are taking advantage of this labor saving device in order to send you all some word concerning the work in this field.

One is largely occupied in visiting the stations, large and small. The number of congregations has increased so that it requires the year to visit them all. Next year we may not be able to do that. On the whole the work is in very good condition. Progress is being made slowly but surely. During the year about one hundred candidates were baptized. We do not count the ones who make profession of faith for many of them are not real conversions, and thus the figures are misleading.

Last December we visited La Junta, a little settlement on the banks of El Salvador's largest river.

It is probably the most backward place that we visit, but there is a growing congregation there, and already improvement as regards their backward condition can be noted. The chapel in La Junta is almost square. It is a mud construction whitewashed. The floor is Mother Earth. One sits on a low, backless bench and a dim light is thrown on his hymn book from a "candle". (This is a small tin lamp which burns kerosene and resembles the kind that miners use, or used to.) Truly a primitive building! But it represents the sacrifices and devotion of the believers; and it is the best house in the settlement. Three times a day we held meetings in this little chapel, and three times a day we ate our food (as primitive as the surroundings) on the little table which also serves as a pulpit and after the night meeting we would sling our hammocks from the rafters and sleep the sleep of the tired.

Our arrival is the sign for the whole village to turn out. Their curiosity never seems to be satisfied. Even the babies stop crying when we open the suitcases, and seem to be interested in the contents. Some of the braver ones even venture to try on our clothes. One has to be as agile as an acrobat to change his clothes before so many keen eyes, but there are ways and means to do even that, and when the feat has been accomplished interest gradually dies down until meeting time.

As it grows dark the people begin to arrive. In the absence of clocks or watches they have to depend upon the sun, so naturally, when the sun goes down it is time for meeting. In comes a rather tall, slender man with a full beard. One thinks his name must surely be Abraham—but it is not. Others follow. Here comes a little girl about five years old who carries a smaller child slung on her hip. She is followed by her mother carrying a still smaller child and this is typical of all of them—babies abound. It takes but a little while to fill the chapel and the service is started. They all like the singing and are fairly quiet during the prayer, but strong opposition is displayed on the part of the babies as soon as the missionary starts his message. All the arts are expended upon them to keep them quiet. Will they stop crying? Will the mothers be able to sit through the meeting? Will the preacher be able to continue? Some are quieted, some go to sleep, but always some have to be taken out. Here we mention just a few of the disturbing elements that keep the people from getting the Word of God into their hearts. This is true, not one of the congregation in La Junta, but of nearly all of the country congregations. Won't you pray for the people?

While there is much to aggravate, much to discourage, as we have mentioned in the above paragraph, there is also much to gladden the heart and make the missionary feel that all his labors are not in vain in the Lord.

We think just now of the recent conferences held in San Juan, a village about nine miles from La Junta. The conferences lasted four days, three meetings being held each day. The believers dedicated those days to the Lord. Their usual occupations were put aside, and each morning and afternoon the chapel (which is a fairly large one) would be well filled. One could feel the presence and activity of the Holy Spirit as the Word was taught. It was surely inspiring to see them all there, desirous of learning more about the Way of Life. Faith souls made profession of faith in the evening meetings.

After the San Juan Conferences

we went to El Shiste. Some of you know of how we went there last year to straighten out a bad tangle. Nearly all the trouble is cleared up now, and those who comprised the most disturbing elements are out of the church. This year we found that the chapel had been enlarged about six or seven feet, a new roof put on and new benches have been made and installed. There was good order in the meetings and a sense of reverence prevailed. The church was organized with its deacons and elders, the Lord's Supper was instituted and six believers were baptized.

We also give praise to God for other new fields that have been opened by the missionaries and native workers. From La Junta they are visiting many of the villages. They plan to do the same in San Juan. Through the worker in Santiago Nonualco a work is again being opened in San Pedro Masahut where many attempts have been made to enter with the gospel, but it has always been refused. The missionaries in Cojutepeque have opened the department of Cabanas to the gospel and there are now a few believers in the town of Julitape. Here in San Salvador the young people press a constant campaign against the enemy in the city and in the smaller nearby towns.

We would ask you to continue in prayer for the completion of the San Salvador chapel. During Sunday School there is quite a bit of disturbance from the upstairs departments which could be subdued in part if the side walls were covered and the moldings put up. At present this congregation is supporting five of the workers who are in country places where the believers are so poor that they cannot care for their pastor. Thus, you can see that it is almost impossible for them to do anything on the building at present. However, we want to keep our eyes upon God and not the people, expecting Him to give the money to complete the chapel.

The papers have given us accounts of the floods and other disasters in the homeland and we have prayed for you. Our deepest sympathy goes out to those who have been lost and to those who have lost their dear ones. May God very definitely use this to bring some of His own back to Himself and call sinners to the feet of Christ.

Please accept our sincere thanks for all you have done for us during the year, for your interest, your gifts, your letters (which are always a consolation), your Christmas greetings and your interest. We know that it is first unto the Lord and we praise Him, too.

Yours for Christ and in His Name,
A. Roy and Beatrice MacNaught.

OCTOGENARIAN PLANS DANCE

SAINT JOHN, N. B., April 27—A. P. MacLean, 89, of Victoria, B. C., sailed from here planning to dance the Highland fling in Scotland at the annual Green and Highland Gathering where, 66 years ago, he finished second in a two-mile race against keen competition.

Since his retirement as a locomotive engineer when 65 Mr. MacLean has made a hobby of travel. He had passed his 80th year when he rode a camel and climbed a pyramid.

The octogenarian, with snow-white hair and short-clipped beard, rosy cheeks and eyes twinkling with enthusiasm, appeared as supple as a boy. He had no particular reason to offer for his physical condition, unique in a man nearing 90.

The young-old traveller wears a scarf of the MacLean plaid and talks with a soft Gaelic burr. He saw Queen Victoria turn a tap inaugurating Glasgow's water system, remembered when the Laurier government came into power in Canada and was in the Klondyke during gold rush days.

His wife having died many years ago, he travels alone.

MR. CHARLES E. TAYLOR

Many friends throughout the province have learned with regret of the sudden passing at Courtenay, B. C., on January 20th, 1937, of Charles E. Taylor, aged 62 years.

He was born in Freetown, P. E. I., a son of the late Peter Taylor and Charlotte (Scott) Taylor, and his early life was spent on the comfortable homestead there.

Later he entered into partnership with Robert C. Auld, general merchant, Freetown, and the well known firm of Auld & Taylor carried on a successful business for a number of years.

In that capacity he will be kindly remembered as a gentleman of the highest integrity. Quiet and unassuming in manner, he possessed a genial, kind disposition, and made friends with all with whom he came in contact.

About twenty years ago he, with his family moved to the Canadian West, first to Kelfield, Sask., and later to Vancouver and Courtenay, B. C., where he was engaged in the lumbering business.

He leaves to mourn the loss of a devoted husband and father, his wife, formerly Miss Mary Beaird of Freetown, P. E. I., a sister of Benj. Beaird of that place; three daughters, Ruby (Mrs. Dudley Burdige) Vancouver, B. C.; Marie (Mrs. Wood), Courtenay, B. C.; Eva (Mrs. Ernest Cowie), Courtenay, B. C., and one son, Atwood, of Vancouver, B. C.; also three sisters, Mrs. Wm. Atwood, New Bedford, Mass.; Mrs. H. N. Downess, Courtenay, B. C.; and Mrs. A. T. Gair, Vancouver, B. C., to all of whom deepest sympathy is extended. The interment took place at Courtenay, B. C.

velopment of beri-beri and other nervous diseases.

(15) It is a good heat and energy producing food, and especially useful in the diet of the young, and when combined with milk and the green leafy vegetables and egg yolk and ripe fruits and cereals with liver taken once a week and a little muscle meat, a complete diet is effected.

(16) When combined in the diet with milk and the green leafy vegetables, which Prof. McCallum has named the protective foods, and also with fish liver oils the body is fully protected against the development of rickets.

It is reported in the March issue of a health Magazine, that a survey had been made among thousands of children in summer camps, to ascertain with vegetable each preferred by choice. The result showed that the first choice of these eighteen thousand children was the potato, while spinach was the second choice.

All these most valuable properties that have been described as embodied in the potato, is based on the assumption that this product is fully matured and ripened in its natural element, as it is now postulated that all products of the soil must be fully ripened and matured in its natural element, in order to possess full and adequate nutrition value.

The findings of many investigators and authorities on nutrition have been utilized and incorporated in the preparation of these series of articles on the potato including that of Prof. McCallum, Mendel, Steenback, Sherman, Mellanby, Hauke, Shohl, Bell and many others.

The nutrition value of every food is primarily determined by the character of the soil where grown, and by the accompanying factors as climate, temperature, amount of rainfall, cultural methods, kind and amount and proportion of contained elements of fertilizer used and when and how applied.

The character of the soil is most vitally important, for if the plant food is not present in the soil in adequate amounts, and in a soluble form, so it can be absorbed and assimilated by the plant, such a soil certainly cannot produce a food containing the necessary nutrition elements for human use.

The nature of the land and all these factors determine the character and vigor and food constituents of its vegetation and thus indirectly the character and vigor of its inhabitants for it has been said that the character of the soil determines the health and vigor and consequently the character of its people.
