THE OUTLAW

The Story of a Girl Who Didn't Want to Marry

By ETHEL LLOYD PATT.

CHAPTER LII

Several weeks passed during which I did not see Hugh Trotter. I wondered whether he was angry with me? The last time I had seen him was in a roadhouse when I had been dining with Mr. Dayton. Just as I had gone to lift my glass of champagne to my lips, Hugh had come into the restaurant with two other men. Something in the hurt and surprised expression of his face had caused me to put my glass down without touching the wine.

Since then I had not heard from him. I began to think he was really angry. This, I told myself, was unreasonable on his part. After all, he had no real claim on me. He had been a good friend; that was all.

His silence and his absence hurt me more than I could have cared to admit. Also, in the meantime, many things had been happening to me.

A new interest and scarcely an admirable one, had come into my life. There could be no doubt now that Mr. Dayton, president of the Champion Film Company, was strongly attached to me. So strongly that his common sense was imperilled. He had made it plain to me that he would be willing to divorce his wife and marry me if I felt I could care for him. And at the time I was tempted by the thought—though not tempted because I personally liked Mr. Dayton.

But it was scarcely to be wondered at that a vision of jewels and motors and unending spending money should dazzle the vision of a girl who had been brought up in the humblest kind of a home. And so, as the weeks passed, I permitted myself to spend more and more time with Mr. Dayton.

I accepted several of his dinner invitations. I dined with him. Most of the time he discoursed upon my charms.

Then, one evening, when I was resting at home after a hard day's work in the studio, Hugh came to see me. After our greetings, we came at once to the point about which we were both a little self-conscious. It was I who broached the subject.

"Mother has been wondering why you haven't been out to see us," I said, my own pride too hurt to permit Hugh to know that I had missed him.

"I have been pretty busy," he told me. "A lot of night work. It happens that way sometimes on my newspaper. And, anyhow, I didn't know whether you would be glad to see me."

"Well," said Hugh, "about all I have to give you is my time, you know I haven't automobiles and I can't buy you wine. My income doesn't warrant it."

"I don't care anything about automobiles and wine," I declared, my face flushing.

"Why go in for them then, Nell?" queried Hugh. "I tell you the honest truth, when I saw you out at that place I was a little surprised. You know, you didn't seem to be having a very bad time. You didn't look bored. And, by the way, do you often allow old men to hold your hand in public places? As I said, I might be able to buy you much else, my dear, but I have 'most freely given you my respect."

"And there is no reason why you shouldn't give me your respect," I said. "I wasn't doing anything bad. If you want to know the truth Mr. Dayton wants to marry me. I suppose that's all right, isn't it?"

Hugh's face grew a little whiter, but he looked at me steadily.

"Of course it's all right," he said, "if you want to marry him. I thought he had one wife—but I suppose I'm wrong."

"Well, he has one wife," I admitted, "but if I want to marry him he'll divorce her."

"Oh I see," said Hugh. "Very nice. Just the sort of thing a clean, sweet girl should get herself mixed up in. However, I repeat, if that is what you want, I would take it, if I were you, I happen to believe that you wanted something better. Nell, but I'm wrong, as far as I'm concerned, go to it. That's all I've got to say. 'Tender to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, my dear.'"

"Suddenly, for some reason I could not explain, tears filled my eyes."

"Oh, I don't know what you're talking about," I said. "I didn't say I was going to marry him, did I? I just said he wanted me to."

"Well," said Hugh easily, "we seldom talk long with thoughts that don't interest us. I fancy I have the situation clearly in my head."

SWARMS OF NIGHT MOTHS HAVE INVADED SAXONY

BERLIN, July 27.—Saxony has been smitten with a plague of "nuns" the popular German name for a species of night moth. Immense swarms of these have crossed the border from Bohemia and are a grave menace to the Saxon woods. The local authorities are waging an elaborate fight against the invaders. In a few days in the Schandau district, half a million moths were collected and killed.

MISS RUBY HALLIER'S HOBBY

"The one and only hobby I possess is children," declared Miss Ruby Hallier, leading woman with "Three Live Ghosts" that will be at the Prince Edward Wednesday and Thursday, August 3rd, and 4th.

"Children possess for me a fascination that almost becomes a mania. Perhaps you think I am one of those silly sentimentalists. Well, I am not. I simply love children, that is all.

"Whenever children, especially tots ranging from say two to six or seven years, are about me, I'm happy. They never tire of bore me, and that is more than can be said of a great many grown-ups, isn't it? I seek the society of children whenever my stage work permits me I like to romp with them and join them in their little games and diversions. At my summer home I always manage to have plenty of them about me; they sort of act upon me as good, pure tonic, and besides I believe in the companionship of children, they keep one from being cynical—it rather makes one feel after all the bad world of ours is not such a bad place."

Sets now on sale.

HALIFAX BOY STILL MISSING

HALIFAX, July 29.—Much indignation was aroused throughout the City yesterday at the instigation of the report that the missing boy John Power who has been missing for the past five days had been found on the Herring Cove Road. The little fellow's father who was at the Dingle heard the rumor given as fact and proceeded immediately to the scene. Great was his disappointment to find that the story was baseless, as he was almost assured of having the child restored to his arms. The boy's mother had also been told of the supposed rescue and was eagerly waiting for him to be brought home.

The numbers engaged in the search yesterday were much larger than any previous day, and the whole City is deeply concerned over the unfortunate affair. The woods in the vicinity of the Dingle near which the boy was last seen have been searched thoroughly, and the search parties yesterday penetrated the thick woods further west but without finding the slightest clue to reward them for their efforts. A large party of searchers with a supply of food kept up the search all last night, and will be relieved this morning. The Memorial Tower is being used as headquarters by those in charge of the search, and any wishing to render any assistance in the hunt can apply there.

Don't Prod Your Liver to Action

NR Overcomes Bilio-nousness, Constipation, Sick Headache, Quickly, No Gripping or Pain. Guaranteed.

The organs of digestion, assimilation and elimination—the stomach, liver and bowels—are closely allied, and the proper action of any of these organs is largely dependent upon the correct functioning of the others.

"Whipping" your liver into action with calomel or forcing your bowels with irritating laxatives or strong cathartics is a great mistake. A better, safer plan is strengthening and toning the whole digestive and eliminative system with Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets), which not only brings immediate relief, but genuine and lasting benefit.
