P. E. Island Experience Shows That Fishery Conservation Pays

Last Year's Increase In Provincial Lobster Catch Believed Largely Due To Fishermen's Adherence In Other Seasons To Regulation Protecting Spawn Lobsters.

The following article dealing with the lobster fishery industry in Prince Edward Island in 1931, is featured prominently in the current issue of "Fisheries News Bulletin," a publication issued monthly by the Department of Fisheries, Ottawa:

Fisheries operations in Prince Edward Island in 1931 were featured by increased returns from the lobster fishery, which were all the more noteworthy since they were recorded in a year when fisheries returns generally were diminished everywhere.

Incidentally, but a point of importance, the improvement in the lobster fishery of the province is attributed, in part at least, to the fact that in recent preceding seasons most of the lobstermen had loyally respected the regulation requiring that any spawn lobsters found in the traps must be liberated immediately. The purpose of regulations of this kind, of course, is to conserve the fish stocks and Prince Edward Island's experience of 1931 indicates how successful they may be.

Despite the improved showing of the lobster fishery, Prince Edward Island's total fisheries production last year, as shown by information supplied the Dominion Department of Fisheries by its island officers, was smaller than in 1930, both in point of catch and amount of marketed value. No one will be surprised by that; the state of world affairs, economically, was so disturbed in 1931 that the market for fish products was unsatisfactory and, naturally, there was slackening of fisheries operations everywhere. Under all the circumstances, there might have been no surprise if Prince Edward Island's production figures for the year had shown a greater decrease than actually took place.

The island's total commercial catch of fish during the year was approximately 23,460,000 pounds, which had a landed value to the fishermen of a little more than $764,000. Final revision of the year's statistics, of course, may change some of these figures but it is not likely that any very substantial changes will be made. Using the unrevised figures for the year in making comparisons with 1930 results, 1931 saw a decrease of about 2,088,000 pounds in the total catch for the province for the twelve months and a drop of something more than $79,000 in landed value.

So far as catches were concerned, last year brought increased quantities of alewives, caplin, tomcods, oysters, and lobsters but there were decreases in the landings from the other island fisheries, such as the cod, hake, herring, mackerel, smelt and clam and quahaug fisheries. In most cases, and perhaps in all cases, where decreases occurred they were due chiefly to a lessening in the intensity of fishing effort because of unfavourable market conditions.

On the "gain" side of the account for the year, the lobster and oyster increases were the most noteworthy. Oyster catch, 5,326 barrels, was 438 barrels greater than it had been in 1930, notwithstanding that an amendment to the fisheries regulations which became operative last October raised the size limit for marketable oysters. Interest in this fishery in Prince Edward Island has been stimulated in the past two or three years by steps which the Department of Fisheries has taken to encourage oyster farming and further expansion of production in the next few years seems likely. As a result of successful experiments by the department in oyster culture in the province, applications for leases of suitable areas have been made by a number of citizens desirous of undertaking oyster farming in Prince Edward Island waters.

The increase in lobster catch during 1931 totalled more than 1,500,000 pounds!

In 1930 the landings amounted, all told, to about 8,082,000 pounds and last year they rose to 9,677,000 pounds. The landed value of the 1931 catch also showed a gain, totalling nearly $572,000 as against $539,730 in 1930. The output of canned lobsters increased to 37,718 cases, as compared with 31,935 cases in the previous year, and the Department of Fisheries' supervisor

APPRECIATION OF The Charlottetown Guardian

It is usual for a Newspaper Editor to receive more bricks than bouquets. The following unsolicited testimonials from undoubted authorities in newspaper production are all the more appreciated on that account.

The Editor, The Charlottetown Guardian.
Dear Sir:

I have been personally interested in newspapers for twenty years, on both the editorial and revenue sides. Daily into this office on his several trips the postman brings armloads of newspapers from all over the country.

The newspaper that is chosen every day for my relaxing hour is the Charlottetown Guardian. I have never been to the Island, and have no reason to read your paper other than to hear how your editorial page comments on affairs in general, even though I am not a Conservative. I like its studies of national subjects and international ones and its brilliant assembly of Notes by the Way. Not overlooking those Health Talks. It happens that I am one of those persons whom folks flatter as widely read, one who goes in for "deep stuff" and enjoys watching the world go around with analysing eyes. So one feels moved to utter a pleasure on the chatty manner the Guardian deals with things within a broad horizon of human interest in such good sense, simplicity and nice neighbor character that the children are in on the audience, too.

FROM CHINA

—I am enclosing renewal subscription to the Guardian, which I pronounce as the best daily paper of its kind published in Canada, for I have seen nearly all of them and checked them over, and have thus come to this conclusion. Most of the papers here are from the Eastern Provinces and though they get their own home town paper they always ask me for the Guardian which I always grant them. I do not ask them to exchange, because when I have read the Guardian, I know that I have read all the news.

I am, Sir, etc.,

New Settlement For Unemployed

FREDERICTON, N. B., June 7.—(By The Canadian Press)—Preliminary steps for the establishment of a new settlement for the unemployed on Crown Lands a few miles south of the present settlement of Geary, Sudbury County, are now being made, with the intention of settling 185 families there during the summer.

Cruisers of the Department of Lands and Mines, with tents and equipment, have been on the scene the past few days, looking over the agricultural possibilities of the land. Similar surveys are being made in other counties of the Province, notably Northumberland, Kings and Queens and the investigations will be extended further should this be necessary.

A three party arrangement insofar as the allocation of relief money to the settlers families is concerned the scheme is participated in by the Dominion, Provincial and Municipal Governments. A sum of $600 is being allotted to each family. Each settler will be given an opportunity to acquire a grant of 100 acres by residing on the land for three years and cultivating ten acres.

Will Seek Sunken Gold Lost Confidence In President

NEW YORK, June 7.—(By The Associated Press)—A master locksmith embarked for Europe today on an adventure that may take him to the bottom of the sea to release treasure buried beneath the waves since the ship containing it was sunk during the war.

To the romance of participating in salvaging this sunken treasure—some $2,000,000 in the gold—there was added the spice of mystery that was stirred by an added thrill. For when Charles Courtney, the master locksmith and president of the American Locksmith Association, sailed today he did not know at what point in Europe he would land. The salvaging concern which engaged him gave instructions that he was to have his passport visaed to permit his to land in England, France or Germany. He was told an agent would meet him at Southampton, Cherbourg or Bremen to give him further orders. The secrecy even extended to the name and location of the sunken ship. All Courtney knows definitely is that three steel chests have been taken out of the hull and landed in Europe.

His first job at the secret rendezvous will be to try to open two of the chests. Acetylene torches were used on one and in the process valuable papers were so badly damaged the salvagers gave up that method. For the job that has defied the experts of Europe, Courtney carried a very modest set of tools. There is an option in his agreement that provides he may descend to the sunken hull and attempt to open its large vault. But he was undecided whether to undertake that part of the job. Not, however, because of fear that he would be unable to open the vault.

"I've never been in a diving suit before," he explained.

At an evening party a gentleman asked a friend in a whisper, "How shall I stir the fire without interrupting the music?" "Oh, between the bars, of course," was the reply.

He—Does your mother object to kissing?
She—Now, just because I allow you to kiss me you needn't think you can kiss me the whole family.

not been accepted, it was learned, and Hector McInnes, K. C., was acting as head of the board pending further action.

Neither Mr. McInnes nor other governors had anything to say about the matter, and it was not known when another meeting would be held. It was indicated, however, that while withholding comment at present, the board might "publish independently" a statement giving their view.
