Too Many Beaus

Sugar's heart almost stopped. From the expression on her face Johnny knew something was amiss. "What's wrong?" he said slowly. "You haven't got another date?" "Please understand," Sugar looked up into his face desperately. "I did promise to go out with Zanle Lou Langworthy and some of her friends. I didn't dream you could be with me."

Johnny turned away. "I'm sure didn't take you long to get yourself dated up, did it? You're going out with a man, I'll bet."

"Yes," Sugar was not going to lie about it. "Four of us are going out for a ride. Zanle Lou and her boy friend, Skipper Lanier, and a nice man I met from New York last week. Do you trust me?"

Johnny exploded. "A man from New York! How did you meet a man from New York?"

Sugar had never seen the little Frenchman angry before. His eyes bored into hers accusingly. Again she told the truth. Johnny got up whitely.

"Sugar Friddle, you're the last girl in the world I'd expect to pick up a man! If that's the kind of girl you are I don't want to have anything to do with you. As far as I'm concerned our engagement is all over. Good-bye!"

He turned and stalked dramatically toward the elevator. Sugar ran after him.

"Johnny," she stopped him with a desperate pull on the arm. "What are you saying? You don't mean that. You can't. I haven't done anything, and you know I haven't."

"Don't say anything you'll be sorry for, just because you're jealous," Sugar said quietly, getting the control of her fast beating heart.

"Jealous!" Johnny shrugged bitterly. "Who wouldn't be jealous? The first night of my life I've ever been free to have a date with you—and you have a date with another man. How would you feel? Break it and I'll forget it."

Sugar wanted, desperately. But she didn't feel it would be fair to Scoop. He'd been so good—stayed in Lorien just to help her. The least she could do would be to keep her promise to see him.

"There's no reason why you can't meet Mr. O'Reilly," Sugar offered soothingly. "But I can't break my engagement. I've nothing to hide. I'll bring him down to see you."

"Over my dead body!" Johnny waxed dramatic. "I'll punch him in the nose if you do."

"Johnny!" Sugar looked thoroughly shocked. "Such language! I've never heard you talk like that before."

"I've never heard you were a pick-up before," Johnny said.

"Sugar," she said, "I'm sorry. I'm sorry. I'm sorry. If you excuse me, I'll be going. I've had quite enough insults for one day, Mr. De Ville. Good-bye."

"Just one thing more," Johnny called, equally coldly. She paused and apologized. "I supposed your rich Mr. O'Reilly from New York felt sorry for the poor little orphan and bought her some new clothes too."

"Oh, you beast!" Sugar choked wildly, and ran from the lobby.

Her first impulse was to run to Mother. But she remembered the dreadful way Johnny treated her. But on second thought she knew it wouldn't be fair to worry the old lady.

Walking swiftly toward River Road, she wrestled with her thoughts. On the outskirts of Lorien she sat down on a log beside the river. Her thoughts became a little more coherent as her breath came back.

Trying to put herself in Johnny's place, she thought the thing out calmly. Her first thought was to run to Mother. But she remembered the dreadful way Johnny treated her. But on second thought she knew it wouldn't be fair to worry the old lady.

The stringy New Yorker stared at Sugar a little too long to suit Zanle and she kicked him in the shins. "Looke, but don't touchee." She took his arm. "Come on, I'm starved."

Skip and Zanle Lou piled in the rumble seat of Scoop's car. Skip leaned over and touched Sugar on the shoulder.

"Do you like your Friddle cakes with or without ham and eggs?" he inquired, a pleased smirk lengthening his long jaws.

Sugar hit her lip. Then she turned with a saccharine smile.

"My favorite dish," she cooed sweetly, "is New York shrimp boiled in oil. How're your folks?"

"Friddle dee dee!" Skip snapped his long fingers under her nose. "Let's stop friddling around and get goin'. My gal friend is waitin' away."

Nebraska Doctor Admits "Mercy Killings"

CHADRON, Neb., Nov. 27.—(A.P.)—Dr. Milton McDowell said today he had administered poison in 1908 to two men who faced death by drowning after the freight train on which they were riding had plunged into a washout.

The men were transients, he said. Five persons were killed in the accident June 25, 1908, on the Chicago and North Western railroad near Clinton, Neb.

"They both begged me to give the poison before they should drown," Dr. McDowell said. "I feel I did an act of mercy, a Christian act, and one a man should be ashamed of or shrink from."

"A doubleheader freight had plunged into the washout caused by a cloudburst," he related. "The two transients were caught on the floor of the car they had been riding in by the truss rods of another car. They were pinned fast to the floor."

"The water was rising very rapidly and I was informed by Superintendent L. N. Costley that it would be about two hours before the wreckage could be cleared to permit the wrecker to free the men. The two men were begging that someone do something to prevent them from drowning."

Dr. McDowell related he waded more than a mile deep in the icy water to the men, and asked them if they "wished me to give them the poison or if they wanted to take a chance."

"They both begged me to give it to them. I immediately gave each man one-half of what I had in my hypodermic syringe. I held their heads above water for a few minutes, and it was soon over," he said.

TORONTO, Nov. 26.—(C.P.)—A. Laurier Hiphill, who was born near Simcoe, Ont., and for the past 30 years has been a plastic surgeon in Paris, predicted today that in a few years euthanasia—"mercy killing"—will be made legal in France and other countries.

"It is undoubtedly right that a doctor should be able to take the life of a patient past 70 suffering from an incurable disease, or of a defective child," he said. "I wouldn't have the nerve to do it myself. My specialty for 30 years has been straightening the faces of children, and I suppose I've had some of the ugliest faces the world has ever seen. These things may be possible to alter and cure, and I haven't the heart to do otherwise. But any doctor who has the courage to take mercifully the lives of incurable older people and defective babies is a hero, helping humanity and saving the father and mother from all kinds of grief."

How Many People Hear Radio Speeches?

(From the Windsor Star)

Eight men sat at one luncheon table in a local hotel yesterday. Seven were Windsorites; the other was a Detroit visitor. In the group were four medical men, one retail merchant, one wholesaler and one newspaperman—all of Windsor.

"Did you hear Mr. Bennett's radio speech on Saturday night?" someone asked. The newspaperman said he had listened to the whole of it. One doctor admitted he had heard part. The rest had not heard one word of it. The newspaperman commented that he had listened all through as a matter of personal professional interest.

People who attach so much importance to the radio as a means of getting their messages—business, political or otherwise—to the public might give some consideration to this informal survey. Mr. Bennett spent a great deal of money in hiring air facilities to present his Government's case to the people. Yet, here we have a typical group of Canadian citizens, seven of them, and only one of the seven heard the complete address Saturday night. Five of them failed to hear a word of it.

Not long ago we reproduced from the Kitchen Record some interesting figures based on a survey made by that paper of radio listening. The incident on Monday in Windsor substantiates the Kitchen-Record figures. One can hardly imagine anything more important in this country than a speech by the Prime Minister. Mr. Bennett is, by reason of his position, the outstanding man of the hour. In addition to that, he is a speaker of renown. Yet, it is clear that only a small fraction of the population heard his Saturday night address and the chances are that no greater proportion listened to the other three of his series.

By contrast, it is safe to say that millions of Canadians read the reports of Mr. Bennett's speeches as they appeared in "The Windsor Star" and other daily papers. The publication of those speeches cost Mr. Bennett exactly nothing. His time on the air meant an outlay for him, or for his party, of thousands of dollars. Some day Mr. Bennett and other public men will find, just as many large business houses are now discovering, that they can spend their publicity appropriations to much greater advantage by using the newspapers exclusively. In the latter case, they are SURE of a complete audience; using the air they have no guarantee of reaching even one percent of the potential market.

Yesterday we heard a man remark that some of the biggest wireless programs, some of the finest and most expensive features, are delightful for the public but might be poor business for the large firms making them possible. His explanation was that the programs have worked up great fame for certain artists, but might little for the products the artists are supposed to advertise. By way of illustrating his point, this gentleman said that he had taken the trouble to inquire from several of his friends as to the sponsorship of one of the air's most celebrated, mostly costly programs. Of five persons to whom he had spoken, only one was able to name the product advertised.

Duty Free Cheese Needs Certificate of Origin

According to the Canada-United Kingdom Trade Agreement, 1932, it is necessary for exports of Canadian cheese to be accompanied by the United Kingdom Certificate of Origin form 120 (sale), in order to enter duty free as compared with a rate of 15 per cent ad valorem payable on non-empire cheese. This form, which the chief Canadian Trade Commissioner in Great Britain, is designed to be completed by the manufacturer of the cheese. In the case of shipments made up of parcels of cheese collected from a number of manufacturers, and where it is impracticable to obtain certificates from each manufacturer, the British Customs for some time past have been accepting certificates 20 (sale) when signed by Canadian Government dairy produce graders, provided the grader is in possession of the facts relating to the manufacture of the cheese and is in a position to give the required certificate.

However, difficulty has been experienced in furnishing certificates for processed cheese, that is, Canadian cheese because of the impossibility of being able to identify the processed cheese with particular cheese purchased from a large number of districts. To meet this situation the British Customs have advised that they will accept certificates of origin on form 120, signed by the manufacturers who carry out the final process on such cheese, provided the certificates are endorsed to the effect that the manufacturers in question hold Canadian graders' certificates in respect of the cheese used by them and that no foreign cheese enters the factory.

Big Fish Catches At Boston Piers

(A. F. By Guardian's Special Wire)
 BOSTON, Nov. 26.—Catches totaling 2,000,000 pounds of fish reached the Boston fish pier today aboard 48 vessels. It was the largest day's receipts in several months.

Prices, while slightly lower than last week, were still somewhat above those prevailing six months ago. Of the total receipts 650,000 pounds were haddock, and the balance, cod, pollock and mixed ground fish.

AVERAGE WOMAN IS TOO SENSITIVE
 BOSTON, Nov. 26.—Helen West Bradley, who at 15 rebelled at being a woman's companion and became a successful lawyer, said today there was a fertile field for women in the legal profession.

"There are the same opportunities for women in the legal profession as there are for men," she said, "providing they apply themselves to hard work, begin at the bottom, and go slowly and carefully."

"The little prejudices against them, because they are women, are immaterial. Any woman with natural ability, who really perseveres, has an excellent chance to succeed. The average woman is too sensitive. She looks at things from the personal rather than the impersonal viewpoint, which makes it difficult for her to attain the success of a man of the same ability."

Miss Bradley became dissatisfied with her lot when she was employed as companion of an elderly woman. She resigned.

Successfully she became an office clerk, secretary of a law firm, a lawyer, and a professor of law.

RATIONS FOR BACON HOGS

(Experimental Farms Note)

Experimental work conducted at the Dominion Experimental Farm, Nappan, Nova Scotia, during the last few years has demonstrated that feeds commonly grown or manufactured in Eastern Canada will supply practically all the food nutrients necessary to properly develop and finish the bacon hog.

Cost of production studies in the growing of the common cereal crops show that these crops (oats, barley and wheat), qualify considered, can be produced more cheaply than they can be purchased.

With these points in mind, there can be no hesitation in recommending the following rations for general use:

First period—From weaning at 6 to 8 weeks to 100 pounds live weight: Ground oats, 300 pounds; ground barley, 500 pounds; ground wheat, 200 pounds; skim-milk, 1 1/2 to 2 pounds per pound of grain mixture, or high grade fish meal, 8 pounds per 100 pounds of meal mixture.

Second period—From 100 pounds live weight to finish at 210 pounds: Ground oats, 100 pounds; ground barley, 600 pounds; ground wheat 300 pounds; skim-milk, 1 pound per pound grain mixture, or fish meal, 5 pounds per 100 pounds grain mixture.

The age to start on this ration is given as 6 to 8 weeks, the most suitable age for weaning. Pigs younger than this are not able to stand a heavy ration. If found necessary to wean at a younger age, a ration that has proven satisfactory here is equal parts ground oats, with the hulls sifted out, or ground hullless oats, and white middlings. The pigs at this farm are started on this before weaning, in a pen or creep separate from the mother sow and they suffer no setback when this practice is followed. Add a little milk or fish meal to the mixture and make all feed changes gradually.

When feeding skim-milk in the above ration, a mineral mixture is necessary. A suitable one may be made up of equal parts of ground limestone, common salt and bone char or bone meal, and fed at the rate of 4 pounds per 100 pounds of grain ration.

Skim-milk, however, is not essential for the proper development of the bacon hog. High grade fish meal has proved to be an excellent substitute.

Feed three times daily for the first period and twice daily from then to finishing. Regularity in feeding is essential to success.

Variations in the above rations may be made if conditions warrant. For further information write to your nearest Dominion Experimental Farm or Station.

LOVE NOTE TO DUCE'S SON FALLS INTO FOE'S HANDS

ADDIS ABABA, Nov. 26.—Palace authorities clucked today over an ardent love letter, which was a bright spot in the daily flood of mail, mostly requests for jobs.

The letter, from a girl Fascist in Holland, is addressed "Vittorio Mussolini, Aduwa, Ethiopia." It expressed hope that as soon as the war is over she will be able to visit Duce's son in Rome.

Officials decided to return the letter with a note explaining that under present circumstances it is difficult to deliver and wishing the budding romance success.

The marketed value of the fisheries of Manitoba last year was $1,465,358, while in 1933 it was $1,076,136.
