

Preparing for the next advance

The soldier quickly learns that war does not entirely consist of advances; or even of retreats and advances.

These are interludes in the long process of "holding on," and "sticking to it." Most of his time is spent in a necessary, sometimes unpleasant, but not exciting routine. Nevertheless, it is during such spells of stagnation that the cause may be lost or won. Not till conditions improve will a concerted advance be made.

When the moment does arrive, success will depend on the thoroughness of preparation, in the discouraging, uneventful period when there was "nothing to report." It was just such dogged preparation, in the worst period of 1918, that made possible the crowning triumph of the Hundred Days.

Now is the time, surely, to recall our wartime experience. In this period of waiting we must make our preparations for the next advance. Unless we use time wisely, we shall not be ready when the moment comes. It is an occasion for taking long views.

No longer do we think in terms of the home market only. Depending on our wealth of hydro power, and the massive industries that use it, we have adventured across the seas and found distant markets also. Within the next generation, some of these markets must expand enormously.

The next advance may carry us a long step forward. Our perspective, therefore, should be focussed on the far horizon.

Bon Ami
—its many uses

Did you realize that Bon Ami Cake and Bon Ami Powder had so many uses? The ones shown here are but a few of the dozens you'll find throughout the house.

For some things you'll prefer the snowy-white Powder for others—especially windows and mirrors—nothing equals the old favorite, Bon Ami Cake.

It just seems that this quick-working, scratchless cleanser was made to order for busy housewives. Bon Ami takes the work out of housework... takes the hard scrubbing out of cleaning... never reddens or roughens the hands.
