— SEE PREVIEW OF FILM —A preview of the film "Why We Fight" was shown to the members of the Rotary Club of Summerside at the regular weekly luncheon held yesterday. The film which has just been released by the Department of National Defence for civilian showing is a historic record of the conquest of Norway, Belgium, Holland and France. Made up partly of captured film it has been on the "must" list for all personnel of the Army. It has been obtained by the P. E. I. Travel Bureau and will be shown throughout the Island. It is intended to put it on in the Summerside High School Auditorium next week and of the x-ray fund of the Prince County Hospital. It will also be shown in Charlottetown in aid of the Red Cross. The picture is in four reels, but only two were shown yesterday. These show Hitler, after overrunning Poland and turning from the east to the conquest of Norway, then the low countries and France. First the softening process of propaganda and fifth column methods then the blitzkrieg. The tragedy and suffering of the people in these countries as they are bombed from their homes and then machine gunned on the roads, and later made the slaves of the German new order is told in dramatic detail. The piles of human bodies after the bombing of Rotterdam tell their own story. Mr. J. F. Arnett presided at yesterday's meeting and Mr. James Mullins of Charlottetown was a guest—S

PLUMBING MARKED WHETHER SICILIAN FASCIST OR NOT

By MAURICE DESJARDINS
Canadian Press War Correspondent

MESSINA, Sicily, Sept. 28—(CP)—The best way to tell a Fascist from a non-Fascist is that the former has plumbing in his house, reported an Allied officer whose job is to uproot the remnants of Fascist organizations in Sicily and round up their members.

Most Sicilians belonged to the Fascist party for personal profit rather than any great desire to better conditions in the island, said this official who has been corralling Fascists since the day of the Allied landings.

He said he didn't believe Sicily ever was a Fascist stronghold. Sicilians, however, were born politicians and some joined the Fascist party for lack of another card to keep with the trend.

A small number joined because they "swallowed propaganda blasts from Rome," the officer added. Others were attracted by the splendor of Fascist uniforms and regalia. The same love of pageantry and folderol make Sicilians bedeck their donkeys and carts with multicolored plumes and ribbons.

GOVERNMENT CORRUPT

Fascist officials, discovering graft was easy, took all they could from the people. The Allies found the Sicilian government sadly corrupt.

There are stories of town officials going to the beaches and awaiting fishermen's return to grab the best fish, of a Fascist "podesta" or mayor dragging enemies of the regime to his office, feeding them castor oil by the glassful and having them beaten.

Fascist bigwigs were alleged to have caches of grain in luxurious homes in the centre of squalid settlements.

Though Mussolini's admirers claimed fascism accomplished a lot of good, it certainly didn't appear to have improved life for Sicilians generally.

PRIMITIVE LIVING CONDITIONS

Many were found to be leading miserable, primitive lives sharing dirty homes with poultry and pigs.

In the early days of the campaign when the Allies marched into a town, they generally found it deserted. The population started to return to their homes two or three days after Allied occupation. Then the rounding up of Fascists started.

The invaders received considerable help from the "Carabinieri," a body of state police which had received its orders directly from the King of Italy rather than the Partito Nazionale Fascista. Capable policemen, the "Carabinieri" proved helpful to Allied authorities who returned their rifles and gave them the job of policing their own peoples.

In the search for Fascists, Allied authorities found there was a republican movement advocating that Sicily become a protectorate under the wing of a country like Britain or the United States.

"Things have quieted down, now," the roundup officer said. "The most dangerous Fascist characters have been arrested and the remaining suspects are kept under close watch."

tecting a convoy when they carried out their attack. There was nothing in the Airforce announcement to indicate the fate of the merchant ships.

Remained On Surface

The R.C.A.F. reported every submarine attacked by its Liberators remained "on the surface and attempted to battle it out with the attackers" who were met "by a fierce curtain of anti-aircraft fire."

Despite the resistance the Canadian airmen in most attacks dropped their depth charges and peppered the submarines with machine-gun fire.

The new armament of the submarines presents a problem for Canadian naval and air force anti-submarine forces but it is a problem which has been anticipated.

It is considered just one more case of a new defence being worked out for a particular kind of attack, and it will probably require some new development to counteract it.

The new development in U-boat warfare is of special interest to Canada because Canadian forces —naval and air — have the job, assisted by United States and British units, of protecting convoys in the Northwest Atlantic.

Chemical to Aid Rescues at Sea

NEW YORK, Sept. 28—(AP)—A glowing chemical that lights up the water of the ocean, to aid in rescues at sea, was described officially today by the United States naval bureau of aeronautics.

The chemical is fluorescein, a red crystalline power which dyes silk and wool yellow and has been used for years to detect leaks in water systems. It makes a large yellow-green patch on the water, visible 10 miles away from a plane at 20,000-foot altitude.

A package of it goes with a Mae West life belt and other packages are placed in life rafts. The packages, water-proof, have a ripcord for release by a castaway at will, so that he can light up the water around him whenever he thinks one of his own planes is within range.

Feeding and Care of Poultry

(Experimental Farms News)

The wise poultry keeper is now planning his winter campaign in order to obtain the best production.

Houses should be checked carefully for leaks and drafts. Drafts are particularly detrimental to heavy production and no flock of birds will lay heavily if litter becomes damp. The house should have plenty of light and means should be provided for adequate ventilation, says B. F. Tinney, Dominion Experimental Farm, Charlottetown, P. E. I.

Thoroughly clean and disinfect premises and equipment. Remove equipment, then sweep ceilings walls, floors, drop boards, after which scrub or spray with a hot solution of lye. When dry, the ceilings and walls, roosts and drop boards, etc., should be given a coat of lime wash.

With the premises cleaned and ready, plan to house only vigorous, healthy pullets. Weakling stock is a profitless proposition.

Keeping the premises clean and sanitary at all times will tend to prevent outbreaks of parasites and disease—both of which are handicaps to economic production.

For the best production, birds should receive adequate feed and the ration should be well balanced. High protein concentrates are somewhat difficult to procure and balancing a ration may now be a bit of a problem.

The following has been recommended as an "all farm" ration that has given satisfaction:—

Oats, wheat, barley in equal parts. Grind part of this and hopper-feed as a mash keeping it before birds at all times. Use the same materials as a scratch grain, feeding this more heavily in late afternoon or just before the birds go to roost. Keep dark green, good quality alfalfa or clover hay in racks where the birds can reach it. Alfalfa is preferable, if available, and if the hay is soaked in small lots, (seven to ten pounds per one hundred hens per day), it is surprising the amount they will eat. With this ration skim milk or buttermilk only should be used as drink. This will require about one gallon per day for each 25 to 20 birds. Milk must be used to supply necessary protein and if water is given the birds will not consume sufficient milk.

Shell and grit must also be supplied. Cull frequently and dispose of the free boarder and unprofitable birds.

P.C. Candidates Nominated in N.B.

CARAQUET, N.B., Sept. 28—(CP)—The first candidates for the next general provincial election in New Brunswick were chosen today at a Progressive Conservative convention here.

The party's standard bearers in Gloucester County will be L.A. Palmer, Bathurst accountant and a newcomer to the provincial political arena, Leo Gregoire, Shediac, a former unsuccessful candidate, Eustache Godin, Shippegan, a school teacher, and Albany M. Robichaud, Bathurst barrister, who was defeated in the last three federal elections.

No date has been set for the next provincial election. The full term of Premier J.B. McNair's Liberal Government will not expire until next autumn.

In Memoriam

MRS. FRANK ANDERSON

MAUGERVILLE, Sept. 26 —Mrs. F. Annie Anderson, 88, wife of Frank Anderson, died Saturday night at the home of her nephew, Walter T. Anderson, Maugerville, after an illness of several months. Born in Prince Edward Island, she was a daughter of the late Alex and Jane (MacQuarrie) Ferguson.

She had lived in Blackville before her marriage, later moving to McLeod Hill, York County, for 16 years and then residing at nearby Nashwaaksis for 22 years. Besides her husband, she is survived by several nephews and nieces.

The funeral will be held Monday afternoon from the home of her nephew here, with service at the Nashwaaksis United Church by Rev Dr. G. M. Young of Fredericton. Interment will be in Douglas Rural Cemetery.

BATHING BEAUTY DISLIKES WATER

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 28—(CP)—Shirley Lange, 18, whose parading in a bathing suit at a Lake Ponchartrain beach won her the title of Miss New Orleans, told photographers that she is "deathly afraid" of water.

She refused to enter it, even to ankle depth, for picture purposes.

But Pte. John E. Doughty, now at nearby Keesler Field, doesn't see anything funny about that. A former lifeguard at Atlantic City, N. J., and credited with saving more than 2,000 persons from drowning during 21 years, he spent half his life in a bathing suit but never learned to swim. "I only go swimming once or twice a year," Doughty lamented. "We did our rescue work from a boat.

King Expresses Hope Election Can Be Delayed

Prime Minister discusses situation before National Liberal Federation.

By C. R. Blackburn
Canadian Press Staff Writer

OTTAWA, Sept. 28 — (CP) — Prime Minister MacKenzie King last night told a dinner gathering of close to 400 National Liberal Federation members that he hopes that there will be no necessity of a general election until the hour at which we may look forward to welcoming back to their homeland" those Canadians who survive the war overseas.

But "whether a general election can be delayed until that time I cannot say," he added.

Mr. King was speaking in reply to the toast to the guests at a dinner of the Advisory Council of the National Liberal Federation and Liberal workers from coast to coast, who yesterday morning started a two day party reorganization meeting.

The last 10 pages of the Prime Minister's prepared text were devoted almost exclusively to the question of a general election and, while Mr. King indicated an apparent determination to avoid an appeal to the country until the war is over or the statute life of Parliament is ended, mid summer 1945, he mentioned a number of contingencies which might bring on an election at any time.

He quoted a reported statement by E. B. Jolliffe, Ontario C. C. F. leader, warning his followers that the Federal Government would seek an immediate election in hope the people would not "change horses" in midstream.

Mr. King said of Mr. Jolliffe that "were I like him, thinking in terms of winning elections rather than, as I am of winning the war," he would find ample ground for an immediate dissolution of Parliament and an appeal to the people.

"I should have no doubt whatever as to what the results of that appeal would be."

"At this, of all times, the Canadian people are not in a mood to countenance any change of administration that would weaken or impair the influence and might of the magnificent war effort of this country".

He had taken the stand at adjournment of the House last July that the greatest ordeals of the war were ahead and that until these were over the needs of the fighting forces commanded the whole attention of the Government and the people of Canada.

Any question of a general election should be viewed in the light of that responsibility to the Canadians overseas, Mr. King said.

Possibilities

An election before the war's end would be necessary, Mr. King said if:—

1. The war is still raging in 1945 when the statutory life of the present Parliament ends;
2. Sufficient evidence arises to indicate that "any considerable proportion" of Canadian people are unwilling to continue to support the Government's policies;
3. A group or combination of groups in Parliament moved to impede the work of Parliament or to "misrepresent and distort Government policies" to make it next to impossible for the Government to carry on;
4. There were dissension in the ranks of the Government and its supporters "for causes at the moment wholly unforseen," of which Mr. King said "personally I have little fear of anything of the kind occurring."

Mr. King said there might also be events or happenings "at present completely beyond our ken, outside as well as within Canada, which might make a general election advisable or necessary."

The Prime Minister said that to have opposition groups consistently playing politics while the administration devoted its efforts to winning the war is "an intolerable situation which cannot be allowed to continue."

Mr. King reviewed the progress of political affairs in Canada since the war. He said that all opposing political parties were carrying on active organization and propaganda measures looking toward victory at the polls, while the Liberal party had been devoting its whole thoughts to winning the war.

There had been recent claims that the Administration did not enjoy the confidence of the people, Mr. King said. If he felt that way he added, it would be his duty to ask for immediate dissolution of Parliament.

But he did not share the view, and if he chose to test it by calling an immediate election, "there would be throughout Canada not rejoicing but consternation."

He challenged any responsible person to say Canada had not made a "magnificent war effort," and declared it would be "unthinkable that all this means nothing to the Canadian people."

P. E. I. Election

The results of the Ontario elections had reflected only the reaction of the electors of that province to the Provincial Administration involved. The same was true of the election in Prince Edward Island. Neither had anything to do with federal matters.

The four Federal by elections last month, two in Quebec and one each in Manitoba and Saskatchewan had been lost because while Federal Liberal organization was nil and had been since the 1940 elections the opposing parties were well organized.

Mr. King said the Progressive Conservative Party, and the Conservative Party as it was previous to last December, had abandoned any pretence of forgetting politics during the war. He described that party's organization efforts.

The same was true of the co-operative Commonwealth Federation, he said. He commented on their recent affiliation with a Labor Union Federation, warning the latter that in his long experience he had never seen any good for labor come from affiliation with one particular political party.

Mr. King's bitterest words were for Le Bloc Populaire Canadien, formed in Quebec by a handful of his former House supporters led by Maxime Raymond, elected in 1940 as Liberal member for Beauharnois Laprairie.

This small group of "Malcontents" sought to "set Quebec against the rest of Canada" for their own advantage, indifferent to the harm that might come to the people of the Province.

Mr. King recalled the situation in 1939 when, soon after the outbreak of war, "we were told that our administration which had been in office since 1935 no longer enjoyed the confidence of the Canadian people."

An election was held in March, 1940 and the Government Ministers were every one elected, with a majority of supporters in the House greater than any party had ever received before.

"The answer was decisive. The great trust of the administration of Canada's affairs at a time of war was placed in the hands of the present government."

That mandate had never been lost sight of; it was to centre first interest upon winning the war, to meet domestic problems and to plan for the future.

Mr. King said it was a fact that immediately after the March, 1940 Dominion elections all Liberal party organization in Canada was terminated and party publications suspended.

This was not true of opposition parties, said Mr. King. The Conservative (now Progressive Conservative) party began at once "to organize a campaign against the administration with a view to dividing its forces and substituting a different administration for the one that had been returned with such an overwhelming majority."

Conscription Issue

The issue of conscription had been forced to the forefront in 1941 with talk of a National Government to enforce it, while Conservative party leaders travelled about organizing constituencies.

In November, 1941, the Conservatives met in Ottawa to choose a new leader (Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen) and "no longer was there to be even the pretence of co-operation with the government in its war effort but, instead, out and out opposition to the administration on the floor of the House of Commons.

"That attempt at open conflict failed with the defeat of the new leader in York South in February, 1942.

"A conscription issue which would have split this country from one end to the other and vastly impaired Canada's war effort was thereby, for the time being, avoided in Parliament.

"It was avoided throughout the country by the plebiscite of 1942 which made clear that the government had perfect freedom to adopt conscription for overseas service at any time if, as a means of helping to win the war, that step should become necessary.

"Since 1940, to this hour, there has not been a time when ships were available in numbers sufficient to carry across the seas the men who in Canada had enlisted voluntarily for service anywhere".

Mr. King said the Conservative Party made a fresh start at reorganization at Port Hope, Ont., a year ago and at the Winnipeg convention last Decemer 'outfitted itself with its new name; a new leader and a new set of policies."

Since then there had been a constant program of Progressive Conservative reorganization throughout Canada. Mr. King said the party leader, John Bracken, should have been in the House of Commons as opposition leader during the last session.

Mr. King reviewed the organization efforts of the C. C. F. who, he said, talked about a total war effort but whose "actions fail to measure up to their words."

He said they had never given real support to the Price Control Policy in spite of the fact that this policy was most important in the welfare of the less privileged classes, and the C. C. F. had constantly sought "to spread discontent with price and wage stabilization."

"They talk as if the people at home were entitled to a painless war effort. They steadily exploit every grievance and every irritation

"They have not been content to wait till the war is won to try to have organized labor become a wing of a political party. They openly profess that this is their aim and they are using the circumstances of war to effect that end."

Lt. Wm. A. Johnston Reported Missing

Mrs. William A. Johnston 109 Edward Street Monday evening received the sad news that her husband Lieut. William A. Johnston, R.C.N.V.R. was reported missing presumably killed in action.

The young officer who enlisted something over three years ago, was attached to an 1800-ton English frigate and was the only Canadian on board.

Two years ago he was torpedoed while on duty in the St. Lawrence but being a strong swimmer was able to keep afloat for about an hour until rescued.

June 1942 he married Catherine Bagnall who with a six-month old son, Thomas William, will mourn the loss of a kind and loving husband and father, also surviving are his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Johnston the former engineer at the Charlottetown and a brother Frank who has been serving in the R.C.N.V.R. for the past two and a half years.

Previous to enlisting the deceased was a teller in the local branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce.
