Supposing that our readers are also radio-listeners, we students would be assured that you have been introduced to St. Dunstan's. But the program, "This is St. Dunstan's" (which we out here on the hill were so pleased with, that we silently took a bow at its end) which you heard was merely an introduction; in the weeks to come, we expect that you, on hearing future programs, will become staunch friends and followers of the Red and White banner.

And this is also an appropriate occasion to extend to all who participated in this initial achievement our congratulations.

Next comes a word on sports: Introductory remarks might well state that if defeat, in the course of last week's encounters, then indeed, this week's activities are summarized in one word, victory.

Victory it was in hockey for our first team over the Vics last Thursday night. Victory it was in basketball as both our senior and juvenile teams outscored the respective adversaries, and victory respectively (though no surprise) for the juniors in the intramural competition. Incidentally this same hockey team (with some changes in the line-up) which defeated the Vics 5-2 the other night met some three or four hours ago for a Sackville where tonight (Friday) will find them in their first intercollegiate encounter—and that against Mount A. Followers of this league will be given the opportunity to see the schedule is arranged so that there will be two home-games in the regular proceedings. Again, our intercollegiate team is not the same as last year. Absent from the line-up are Joe Mahan, who played the maximum four years, and who will long be remembered as the star of that game with St. F. X., the game which brought us our first intercollegiate championship. Replaced in this circuit, and of course, Cart MacDonald, the man who started in every game, who is currently performing in the A. P. C. League. From this year's intercollegiate team, there is missing both of them and Stan Deighan, her familiar role as "senior dominion" is hardly compatible with the accepted doctrine, officially rooted in the 1931 Statute of Westminster, that all the members are equal and autonomous.

In a partnership of equals, Canada feels there should be no seniorities, either for the so-called mother country, the United Kingdom, or for what used to be called Dominions but which now refer to themselves as "members of the Commonwealth."

Canada has surrendered any right to speak first at Commonwealth meetings, taking the initiative in recognizing a new set of circumstances pivoting on acceptance of the British Empire and Ceylon as autonomous Commonwealth nations. This view, apparently broadly accepted, holds that the nation which speaks first is the nation which has the priority in interest in the matter under discussion.

It is believed to have prevailed at the recent Commonwealth conference in Colombo, Ceylon. Foreign Secretary Bevin of the United Kingdom, in a speech in Ottawa late last year, emphasized strongly that Britain no longer is a mother country.

"We are one of you," he said, "equal in every way with you."

As External Affairs Minister Pearson told the Commons last November, "the Commonwealth of today is widely different from the British Empire of not so many years ago... I believe most people feel the difference is an improvement."

The mother country complex is dying out. The Dominions no longer consider themselves as some American writers call "British Dominions." Canada has indicated, internally, that her official name is merely Canada or the Government of Canada and not the Dominion of Canada.

It has been left to the members of the Commonwealth to decide for themselves whether to call it the British Commonwealth or plain Commonwealth of Nations. Canada apparently in a mood accepted by the majority, adheres to Commonwealth.

Britain now is formally known as the United Kingdom. Its former Dominions Office is called the Commonwealth Office. And tomorrow India becomes a republic and still retains membership in this loose, informal association of states whose sole formal link is the crown.

PASTEURIZED MILK It is estimated that about 66 per cent of the milk in Canada is pasteurized for human consumption.

The WEEK at S. D. U.

I believe it was Chesterton who wrote, "There is nothing new in the world." Perhaps he was perfectly correct when he spoke of the world, but he could not truthfully apply this to St. Dunstan's this week anyway. Plenty happened! Relax, while I attempt to tell you all about it.

Rome, the city which today embodies both the remains of a past pagan culture perhaps best exemplified by the ancient Colosseum, and the flourishing Christian culture today was the subject of an interesting and educational address given by His Excellency Bishop Boyle to the faculty and students last Sunday evening. Sketching his experiences from the time his liner left New York for the Most Rev. Bishop carried his attentive audience with him and introduced all to "the glory that is Rome". Especially of interest to us was his mentioning of the Pope's deep interest in the work being done at our college.

Supposing that our readers are also radio-listeners, we students would be assured that you have been introduced to St. Dunstan's. But the program, "This is St. Dunstan's" (which we out here on the hill were so pleased with, that we silently took a bow at its end) which you heard was merely an introduction; in the weeks to come, we expect that you, on hearing future programs, will become staunch friends and followers of the Red and White banner.

IN MEMORIAM

CECELIA SMITH

The angel of death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Smith, Malpeque Road, on December 7th and claimed the soul of their beloved daughter Cecelia in her 12th year. Cecelia was a very lovable child and was a general favorite with all who knew her. Intermitting sickness, following rheumatic fever some two years ago, brought her a great deal of suffering and pain. Matured beyond her years she bore all with a cheerfulness and fortitude that was most edifying and a striking lesson to those who look less considerately toward heaven or more fearfully on death. She had a deep, tender love for God who rewarded her with a strong confidence in her hope of heaven and during her last illness she spoke frequently of death and wondered just what heaven would be like. She was ready to meet her God and did so fearlessly.

For all who visited her she had a cheery word and a ready smile and in her direct simplicity she was grateful for all that was done for her; grateful for her good parents who lavished on her every care and attention; to the doctors and nurses at the Charlottetown Hospital; to Father Sullivan who cared for her spiritual needs; to the other priests of St. Dunstan's who cheered and comforted her by their visits; to the Sisters and all neighbors who tried to show their love for her in various little ways.

The Requiem Mass was celebrated at St. Dunstan's Basilica by Rev. P. F. MacDonald, who also officiated at the grave assisted by Rev. W. Simpson. The pallbearers were Lawrence MacDonald, Joseph Hearty, George McDermid and Melvin Hearty.
