It took her almost a minute to turn the horse and in that time she caught two glimpses of many riders, the other from far to the west. Presently they would stream together in a single furious charge toward the point Donado had not dreamed, dug the key to the flivver from inside her glove and handed it to Dirk.

"We'll have to hurry," she said, "the riders are coming fast."

"Much good it will do them," he muttered as he switched on the ignition, "there isn't a horse in the bunch could make it."

"You're being a little stupid dear, aren't you? Perhaps not a horse, but a bullet can. What shall I do with Rayo?"

"Yank off bridle and saddle and turn him loose." Suddenly Joyce began to sob. "What are you crying about? There's simply nothing else to do."

"Oh, it's not that!" cried Joyce, still weeping as she unbuckled throat lach and girth. "It's Troldo, Im — crying about Troldo."

"Don't," said Dirk, "please don't, or you'll have me so I can't do a damn thing. Don't you suppose—Hello!"

Then he continued quietly, "Joyce, hold on a bit; we may both have to ride Rayo. The battery's run down."

"Oh!" she gasped, grief forgotten in the face of fresh disaster.

Suddenly Dirk started tearing out the front cushion. "Here it is, thank God—the crank. Get in, Joyce, take the throttle and work the choke. Hurry!"

He leaped out and in a moment was cranking with all his might. No use. No spark. Then he began using reason and judgment, giving Joyce time enough to do the same. They teased the motor — teased it into a first gasp of life. Then more teasing. Then a roar, so sudden, so mighty that it seemed the old car would shake itself to pieces before Joyce could shut off the throttle. The backfiring was deafening, more like a machine gun than a motor.

"Oh, Dirk!" she screamed though he was already at her side. "I can't make it stop!"

"Who's a fool now?" he yelled at the top of his voice. "Take your foot off the accelerator and push yourself over!"

Then he was at the wheel again, turning cautiously for fear of the spikes of niggerheads, but finally straightening out on the Touca trail, shifting into second and at last into high. Joyce turned, knelt on the seat and looked back. The riders were closer now, quite close; some of them were already dismounting, their carbines unslung, and running to kneel on the farther edge of the barranca.

"Never mind the bumps, Dirk," she said over her shoulder, "give her gas and take everything that comes. The shooting is about to start."

"How far off are they?" asked Dirk.

Then and there Joyce was stumped, for is there a woman alive who knows by sight the difference between a hundred yards and a half a mile? "I don't know," she said; "I haven't the least idea."

"Of course you have!" he shouted impatiently. "How far? Is it ten yards or a mile?"

"I don't know," said Joyce. "I'm not being stubborn; I just don't know. Then she cried, "Never mind—here it comes!"

The first bullet struck in line but well behind the car; it ricocheted and passed over them with a screaming whine. That was enough for Dirk, he opened the throttle wide and sent the flivver careening across the prairie, making note of the direction he would have to take to bring it back to the abandoned trail. More bullets followed but none so threatening as the first and presently there was silence. Joyce sat down and sank back, signing her relief.

"I guess we're safe, Dirk. Hadn't I more ETAIO ET we better nurse the tires a bit?"

"You're right," said Dirk, slowing down. "How long has this soap box been parked in that gully?"

"Let me see," said Joyce, calculating. "Is it a year? No, it can't be. I'll give you a chance to figure it out for yourself, Dirk. How many days have you been at La Barranca?"

"Nine," said Dirk promptly.

"Then add three to that," said Joyce. "It doesn't seem possible. Twelve days, less than two weeks. I was away twelve years; I've been back twelve days. Somehow it doesn't make sense."

CHAPTER XVI

At the first crossroads they were lucky enough to get gas and the poor old flivver, faithful to the last, limped into Touca, a little before noon. Abandoning it in a side street to avoid unnecessary complications, they walked to the San Carlos and before long were feasting on crystal trout fresh from the Lerma and certain equally famed accessories. More than once they raised their eyes to look at each other across the table, then were feasting because their hearts were too full of content for words.

But the moment the meal was over Dirk said without warning, "Joyce, will you marry me? I've got to know."

"Yes, Dirk. When?"

"This afternoon. As soon as we get to the city."

"Oh? Why wait till then?" asked Joyce.

But Dirk was in no playing mood. "See us there," he answered gravely.

For the equivalent of a dire one could have a bun, piece of cake, packet of biscuits and a slab of chocolate. Mothers can have their baby's bottles sterilized and filled with milk.

Women Fulfill Vital Role In London's Tube Shelters

You scratch your head in amazement wondering if gypsies have taken over London's tube shelters as women in green smocks and cherry-red tuccary sanitarium among the serried ranks of people sheltering far underground from the Naz bombers.

Gypsies would not be surprising in that heterogeneous mass of humanity jam-packed on the concrete platforms, but these women have an all-night job—feeding the shelter population.

They work in the canteens established by the London passenger transport to meet the newest demand on the organization's facilities. Organizer of the scheme is Edith Gowan, dapper little Scotswoman with long experience in restaurant ownership and management. About a dozen canteens have been started and before long she will have a staff of 1,000 girls clothed in the distinctive green-and-red ensembles.

At one station Miss Gowan showed reporters the feeding arrangements. Tea, cocoa and soup were steaming in three electrically heated 10-gallon boilers. Some of the 24 girls attendants were dishing out the beverages at a penny a mug while others walked along the platform carrying trays of cakes, buns apples and chocolates.

LIVER AND BACON PIE

Now that liver is so highly regarded as a diet necessary in cases of anaemia, you might like a slightly different way of using it. 3-4 lb. calf-liver, 2 or 3 onions, potatoes, freshly cooked, seasoning, 1-4 lb. fat bacon, dripping, hot water, flour, hot milk. Slice the liver finely and wash it thoroughly; dice the bacon. Boil in well-seasoned flour. Heat a dripping in a pan and fry the onion to a golden brown. Put in a casserole, then put layers of bacon and liver until all is used. Add a very little water, put on lid and cook in a slow oven for 1 1/2 hours.

Have ready the potato crust: an hour before serving, remove lid of the casserole, put on the crust—after adding a little water to the liver—and increase the heat of the oven sufficiently to brown the crust.

To make the crust mash some freshly cooked potatoes, with piece of butter and a little hot milk; add two tablespoons flour and beat it well in. Then turn to a floured board, knead lightly and roll out to the required size.
