RACING DRIVER

By Alexander Campbell
ONE KISS TOLD ALL

Still more important, she knew he loved her. That kiss while he held her arms had told her more than a hundred conversations and a thousands volumes could tell.

The reason why she had not visited him was very simple. She was still engaged to Rupert Featherston. That situation was an impossible one, and she had no tremors about ending it. She was finished with pretence in her life, of all sorts, to continue the engagement would not only be impossible; it would shield Rupert from no hurt. For just as she knew now that she had never really loved him, she knew that he had never loved her.

They had been deceiving themselves. Love on the high plane that they had envisaged it, with no more to it than intellectual appreciation was a thin and unsubstantial and unreal thing.

It was true that Rupert had strangely altered in the last few days. He, too, had abandoned a pose grown wearisome. He was more human and therefore more likeable. But she had a shrewd suspicion that the breaking off of their engagement would hurt him unduly. Just as Frank had awakened her heart, so she suspected that another girl had awakened Rupert's.

But in the meantime, so long as she would not go to Frank's side. When Frank was well would be time enough for them to tackle their problem together.

Frank was good as his word. Released from hospital, he said good-bye to his friends and his "fans," and he received the congratulations that awaited him. He attended the customary courtesy banquet which had been delayed by his accident, and joined the Enfield, bound for Durban. He found the opportunity to board ship for that long talk, which he had planned to have with Dorothy. There were few passengers, and the professor's little party was performed together.

He was content to wait for Dorothy's eyes when he came aboard, had told him most of what he wanted to know.

At Durban they disembarked. Before going inland, Ellington insisted that they visit the Valley of a Thousand Hills, the lovely reserve set aside for the Zululand Natal. A pleasant morning was spent wandering round the colorful hills and the many curio shops. The professor bought a leopard skin bag for Christmas and a fearfully carved native drum for his own collection.

In the afternoon they drove to the Valley of a Thousand Hills. Some miles from the town they turned off the main road in a rough side road, and after a few yards they rounded a bend.

"Marvelous!" breathed Christine, and the others were equally amazed.

It was like casually rounding a bend and finding oneself walking out of civilization in a remote age. These hills which sloped away into the blue distance, unspoiled by any hand, have been those which Alan Quartermain was the first white man to see. They were in Rider Haggard's country, and the scene sharply revived memories of the ever-green romances.

The tumbled hills rimmed a great bowl-shaped valley. On emerald green grass cattle peacefully grazed, and a mob of crazily into the blue heavens from great of beehive-shaped huts dotted about the hill-sides.

Their path was a rough one, and the cars went gingerly. They had left white South Africa far behind them.

CHRISTINE PAIRS THEM OFF

Picnics raced towards them, and gazed in awe at the cars. Then they reverted to sterner business. Holding out tiny palms and snowing white teeth in attractive grins they poured out pleas in which the only English word was "penis."

Little boys of eight and nine clad only in loin-cloths, proudly carried toy spears and small hide shields.

The party was welcomed at the village by the headman, who showed them round the huts, explaining what they saw.

Professor Ellington indicated the stone smoothed by axes of use, on which mealies were ground.

"That goes back to the dawn of time. Our ancestors used them."

It was astonishing to think that with a handful of rude agricultural implements these people had turned this valley into a paradise.

They were honoured by a visit from the chief, a very old, wrinkled man, who had lively memories of battles fought when civilization was a young and tender thing in South Africa. He wore only a string of beads made of animals' teeth and a blanket, but he carried himself like a king.

In his slow, imperfect English he told them as much as they wanted to know about the valley and the like of his people.

Then he mentioned casually that his son had been educated at the famous native institution at Lovedale, and was a B.Sc. So the old and the new met and merged.

After the chief had politely excused himself and returned to the indaba which he was holding on the vexed matter of taxes, straight-backed Zulu women rounded the little party, offering to sell beads and ornaments, some of which were exceedingly beautiful. Professor Ellington added a wicked looking spear to his collection.

1946 Stylemaster Sedan Makes First Trans-Canada Trip to Win Todd Medal for Brig. R. A. Macfarlane

Rolling along "Canada's Main Street"—the Trans-Canada Highway—from coast to coast, Brigadier R. A. Macfarlane, D.S.O., at the wheel of a new 1946 Chevrolet Sedan, has just completed the first ocean-to-ocean automobile trip without leaving Canadian soil.

To win the A. E. Todd Gold Medal—offered in 1912 by the Mayor of Victoria—Brig. Macfarlane left Louisburg, Nova Scotia, with the salt of the Atlantic on his rear wheels, and after nine days of driving he arrived in Victoria, Vancouver Island, B.C., and dipped his front wheels in the Pacific, having covered

4,743 MILES

The Chevrolet used was a stock 1946 model powered with a standard six-cylinder valve-in-head engine. It was selected by Brig. Macfarlane—who held the responsible posts of Director of Mechanization and Deputy Master-General of Ordnance, at Defence Headquarters, Ottawa—because he is convinced that a "sturdy, light, economical passenger car is ideal for the average Canadian citizen." With his extensive experience of army vehicles, on the testing grounds and on active service in two wars, Brig. Macfarlane made the new Chevrolet his choice for his history-making trip—another "first" for Chevrolet!

DOWN "CANADA'S MAIN STREET"—The Trans-Canada Highway, which links province to province, from sea to sea, and opens the way to a great new era of tourist travel.

NEARING THE END OF THE TRAIL—J. V. Johnson and George Warren of the Victoria Automobile Club, meet Brigadier Macfarlane and his Chevrolet a few miles outside Victoria and escort him into the City.

THROUGH THE ROCKIES—The Chevrolet spent thrilling hours skirting sheer precipices and climbing high mountain roads before it encountered this quiet little valley in Canada's Rocky Range.

THE AWARD—Winning of the Todd Medal, offered in 1912, became possible with completion of the Trans-Canada Highway. It is now awarded to Brig. R. A. Macfarlane for the first authenticated journey from Louisburg, Cape Breton, to Victoria, B.C., over a specified all-Canadian route.

THE PACIFIC—After 4,743 miles of rapid, trouble-free driving, Brigadier Macfarlane and his co-driver dip the front wheels of their Chevrolet in the Pacific Ocean—to win the A. E. Todd Gold Medal.
