Troubled with Lame Back for Over 17 Years

Now feeling fine as a fiddle

Harry H. Buss of Egmont, B.C., suffered from a lame back for over 17 years. Every spring he was laid up from work. He tried many remedies, but could not obtain relief. He was advised to try Gin Pills and immediately obtained relief. Read his letter:

"There is nothing to compare with Gin Pills. I suffered unspeakably with a lame back for over 17 years. I tried almost everything, even to hot poultices. I could not sleep. After taking two and a half boxes of Gin Pills I am at work again and feel fine as a fiddle. I will not be without Gin Pills from now on. I am telling everyone in this settlement who has kidney or back trouble to give Gin Pills a trial. Publish my letter as I would like others to know what great relief Gin Pills gave me."

Pains in the back, constant headaches, swollen joints, painful urination, murky urine, brick dust deposits, scanty or too frequent voiding of urine are all symptoms of kidney trouble. Relieve your suffering and ensure a future free from kidney ailments. Get a box of Gin Pills today. 50c at all druggists. National Drug & Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, Toronto, Canada. 124 there was nothing so good for congestion and colds as mustard. But the old-fashioned mustard plaster burned and blistered.

Musterole gives the relief and help that mustard plasters gave, without the plaster and without the blister.

It is a clean, white ointment, made with oil of mustard. Gently rub it in. See how quickly the pain disappears.

Try Musterole for sore throat, bronchitis, tonsillitis, croup, stiff neck, asthma, neuralgia, headache, congestion, pleurisy, rheumatism, lumbago, pains and aches of the back or joints, sprains, sore muscles, bruises, chilblains, frosted feet, colds of the chest (it may prevent pneumonia).

BY MILDRED BARBOUR

UNEASY MOMENTS.

Hartley sought his club. He strode through the lounge, absently responding to hails from fellow members, and went to the telephone where he called his stables on Long Island and ascertained that his favorite polo pony was better.

But the news failed to lighten his air of general gloom and, avoiding the friendly groups scattered around the lounge, he selected a quiet corner and pretended to be busy with his letters.

His eyes wandered from the written pages after a moment. He fell into bitter brooding.

There was a letter from his father, wintering on the Riviera, irascible old Hartley, whose bad-temper and rheumatism were so closely associated that it was difficult to say which was cause and which was effect.

His son guessed what Hartley Senior would say if he knew the state of affairs in New York—if he knew about Camilla Fielding. There would be a fine burst of skyrockets and the trans-Atlantic cable would fairly smoke with imperative demands that Jack take the first boat for Europe. The fact that his son was twenty-nine years old and in possession of a comfortable fortune of his own, in no way lessened the old man's obsession to be obeyed by all and sundry.

Hartley Senior would never understand the lovely, sad nature of Camilla, his son reflected gloomily. He could not be expected to appreciate the pure motives which led Camilla into friendship with himself. She had made him feel that he was a sort of chivalrous, spiritual buffer between herself and the brutality of a gross husband. She leaned upon him, she had made him understand in a rather vague fashion. There is no surer way of capturing a strong man. Even the stupidest woman knows that. But the cleverest man is as blind as blind.

Young Hartley was undoubtedly blind, dazzled by Camilla, but he knew quite well that to his father. Camilla would be no lovely, helpless creature in distress; she would be simply "that married hussy" seeking to entrap an eligible young man.

Away from the fascination of her presence, he himself often felt a qualm. When he stood off and took a look at the situation, his cheeks burned. He saw himself as that despicable creature whom, in saner moments, he had scorned—the dawdler after a married woman far older than himself.

As he read his father's letter, which complained venomously of the Riviera climate and his infernal rheumatism, young Hartley was half a mind to cut the whole business and grab the first boat for Europe. That was the decent way out, even if it were not exactly a gallant gesture.

What was it that Camilla called him sometimes? Her "knight in polo togs." Oh, well! He was playing the game. He'd stick it out, leave it to Fate and see what happened.

Thus he reasoned, believing himself still the captain of his soul. He didn't realize that Camilla had got her claws into him deeper than he knew. He could as easily have cut off his polo arm as leave her now.

And while he ruminated bitterly in his secluded corner, Camilla herself was the centre of several other youthful admirers who had dropped by to escort her to a dinner party. One of them was wrapping her ermine cloak tenderly about her; another held her gloves and vanity case; still in a third stood awkwardly extending an orchid in one hand and a jewelled pin in the other.

Camilla laughed at them all and called them "Darling boys!" and just at that minute Doris descended the stairs. They looked up and saw her and each adolescent mouth fell agape. They frankly goggled.

Doris was to sing at a studio recital that evening. She was wearing her first real evening frock. Camilla had been too busy to consult, so Doris had purchased the own herself and she couldn't have one better if she'd had the whole staff of a Parisian couturier to advise her.

It was a simple little sheath of a lustrous sea-green silk shot with silver. A purple, artificial orchid caught the whole thing together on the slender hip. That was all. But it was enough.

Doris's eyes were green as the sea-green gown. Her hair was a silvery-gilt fluff around her delicate head. Excitement painted the velvety pallor of her skin with faintest rose.

When she saw the row of masculine eyes bulging at her from the hall below—and Cousin Camilla glaring in a quite unwarranted fashion—Doris stopped, hesitated, said breathlessly:

"Oh, I didn't know anyone was here. I—" a second glance at Camilla caused her to withdraw hastily until she heard the front door close.

Camilla sent for her the following morning. She was having her breakfast chocolate. She looked a little tired in the bright sunlight.

"Doris dear," she said sweetly enough, "I sent for you, because I must speak to you about your clothes. I dare say I really should have gone shopping with you, but I've been so busy. Now, that frock, my dear, the one you had on last night—it's really, really—too striking. You are the type that should be awfully careful. You're rather—rather flashy."

"But Cousin Henry says I am very much like you," protested Doris, quite without guile.

Camilla bit her lip.

"We are the same type in a way," she admitted, "but you see, I was clever enough to realize the importance of not being too striking, so I choose my clothes to—to—er—tone me down, as it were."

Recalling some of Camilla's getups, Doris could hardly believe that this was the truth. Camilla scarcely went about looking like a modest violet. But Doris went upstairs and put the sea-green gown away. Camilla had murmured something about a darkblue being more appropriate for a young girl. And moreover, she had repeated that Doris was "flashy."

Doris stared at herself long in the mirror. Well, maybe she was. When she stopped to think about it, she recalled that strange men did try to speak to her on the street and on bus tops. Some of them hesitated on curbs and smiled with hands wandering toward their hatbrims; occasionally one said: "May I walk with you?" and Doris always smiling, merely said: "No thank you. I really rather you didn't," and that always ended that.

She saw now, thanks to Camilla, that she'd have to be more careful.

DUKE RECEIVES $100.000 A YEAR

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—Although the Duke of Marlborough is no longer the husband of Consuelo Vanderbilt, he receives and will continue to receive during his lifetime $100,000 annually under the terms of the pre-nuptial contract entered into by the late William K. Vanderbilt, father of Consuelo.

This was disclosed for the first time by an examination of the marriage contract on file at Rivermead, L.I. The Duke has been drawing this income since November 6, 1898. In addition $100,000 annual income was provided for Consuelo fro mthe estate of her grandfather, William Henry Vanderbilt.

The sacred rota of the Roman Catholic Church has ruled the marriage null because of alleged coercion of the bride.

THE WORST WORKERS

An efficiency expert in the Old Country has come to the conclusion that the worst workers are widows and fat men, and that the most efficient are confirmed spinsters and men who are either tall and wiry or of small statue.

The reasons are both physical and psychological. Widows, he explains, are apt to dream about their past life—to look backward instead of forward—and are also found, as a general rule, to be makers of trouble in office or workshop. Young girls are more satisfactory but they think too much of the future, and in their natural desire to be attractive to the opposite sex give too much attention to the powder-puff and not enough to work. Confirmed "old maids," however, having no such distractions, are able to give all their attention to business.

Among men, those who are bulky are generally too easy-going, whilst sturdy, thick-set men are also classed among the less successful in business life. Tall, wiry men are described as very thorough, whilst men whose height does not exceed 5 feet 4 inches are found to possess both initiative and energy. Married men are usually more reliable than bachelors, but married women are less efficient than single women of the same age.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is a Great Friend—It Stops Pain and Restores Health

Toronto, Ontario. —"I work in a factory and I would have to get away from my work every time I was sick. The dragging-down pains and cramps were very bad, but my back was terrible. It hurt so that I couldn't lie down with it. I heard some of the girls talking about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and they told me to try it. I have taken about a dozen bottles of it and it has done me a lot of good. I never have any pains or sore back now, and have not been off from work a day since I have taken it. I recommend the Vegetable Compound when I have the opportunity."—Miss ROLLO, 21 Howie Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

"The Advice of a Friend"

Hanover, Ontario.—"I was terribly pained and a few odd times I almost fainted. I used to do housework until a few months ago and sometimes I had to leave my work and go to bed. I am now a mender in the knitting-mill. I suffered five or six years from painful periods before I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound by the advice of a friend. I got relief almost immediately, and I tell my friends what a good medicine it is. You may use this testimonial if you like, if it will help others."—Miss J. PEARSON, Victoria Street, Hanover, Ontario.

"Meet my good friend—

BON AMI POWDER!"

IT'S the same soft, scratchless cleanser—in powder form, put up in a handy sifter-top can.

Like the popular Bon Ami Cake it doesn't scratch off the dirt, but blots it up quickly and harmlessly, with minimum effort.

Women find Bon Ami Powder convenient and time-saving on the bigger cleaning jobs—pots and pans of aluminium, copper, agate and tin, bathtubs and refrigerators, Congoleum and linoleum floor-coverings, and many other things.

But, of course, for windows, mirrors and painted woodwork there's nothing like the handy Bon Ami Cake.

Most housewives know that with both these "partners in cleanliness" they can most readily cover almost every cleaning and polishing need. And neither reddens nor roughens the hands.
