Financial Reverses Daze Tom Jordan

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 23 —(AP)—Fabulous Tom Jordan, who once said his expenses ran in the neighborhood of $1,000,000 annually, was identified definitely today as the "big speculator" whose account liquidation last Saturday caused a shutdown of the United States' cotton exchanges.

Silent and apparently dazed by his financial reverses, Mr. Jordan appeared briefly on the floor of the dingy Allen offices from which he has carried on a multi-million dollar business.

Cotton exchange officials said that Mr. Jordan was holding approximately 150,000 bales of cotton when a plunging market caught him. The big gray-haired Virginian declined comment.

Operators said Mr. Jordan was unable to meet calls for additional margin from his brokers, and that he was forced to transfer his holdings to one of the most powerful spot-cotton concerns in the country. He was, nevertheless, able to meet all of his commitments, operators said.

Last August Mr. Jordan told Jim Sharp of the New Orleans States in a copyrighted story that five years ago he borrowed $300 and ran it up to $1,700 on a suburban gambling table. He said he used this stake to lay away a $1,000,000 nest egg the same year.

FEATHERS WON OUT

MONTREAL, Oct. 23 —(CP)—Trim feathers for ladies' hats and a migratory game act adopted by the Canadian legislature in 1917 got Henry April of Montreal into trouble with the law but everything turned out all right today as justice refused to give him the bird.

The whole thing started when April bought some six dozen Terns in Paris. He brought them to Canada and sold them to milliners for use in trimming ladies' hats—that is all except one—which was seized by federal authorities.

April was charged with having in his possession one migratory game bird but when he appeared in court today, Judge Edouard Teller dismissed the charge.

The Santa Maria

One of the most fantastic stories in the United States today is that of the great attraction. With price controls on the United States citizens found themselves practically homeless. The U. S. considered letting Mexican cattle in free; it sought, without success, to get Canadian meat detoured from needy Britain and Europe, and left it usually imported reindeer meat from Alaska—all because the people most in the country. The picture at right gives some idea of what happened when the price ceilings were lifted. Trucks carrying cattle and pigs went higher than ever before. U. S. meat . . . was on the way to the tables again.
