Married Quarters

By DAVID LYALL

"Oh, but I'm quite happy, Jimmie," she said, with a little pitiful smile. "Only I don't fit in. Don't you see for yourself I don't?"

"I thought you seemed all right," he said, man-like, skating on the surface of things, perhaps because he dared not probe. "Well try and get a furnished house and proper servants, and start right. After all, we haven't lost much time, have we, darling?" he said, his strong fingers closing over her with the old grip of passion.

"Oh, no," said Poppy weakly, "none at all!"

CHAPTER XVI

After Poppy had gone to bed that night Jim told his father and mother that he had made up his mind to take a furnished house for the remainder of their stay in Markyate. They seemed surprised. Rhoda stopped her making of a very ugly flannel bed-jacket for hospital use, and steadily regarded him across the table.

"You think it would be better, Jim? Very well," his mother said amiably. "But why? There's heaps of room here, and we like having you, don't we, father?"

"Yes, of course, but I'm not sure but that you're right, lad. Married folk are better to be by themselves."

"That's so," said Jim flatly. "Besides, it's hardly fair that we should spend off you like this."

"If that's the trouble we'd let you pay so much a week, say a pound, and be done with it," said his mother gallantly.

"No, no, mother, that wouldn't meet the case with food the price it is now. Besides, Poppy had better learn to keep house; it will give her something to do."

"She likes it, and she's gettin' quite a handy lass though she does have some queer notions about saucapans and things. She's very particular about the dish-cloths, that I will say for her. She never minds how many times she washes them out."

"Surely all that can't be necessary and I do think it time you resigned, mother," said Jim, recalling what his father had said about the big profits rolling in. "There ought to be a couple of capable servants in this house now that Rhoda is out of it most of the day."

"It's easy to talk about capable servants," said Rhoda tartly. "Men think they are to be picked up in the street, or the nearest registry office, and when they're not forthcoming they think it's our blame. Put an advertisement in the Gazette to-morrow and see if you'll get an answer. Both Mrs. Beauchamp and Mrs. Lane have had one in for five weeks running and haven't had one answer. I rather pity you, Jim, in a furnished house with one pair of hands—Poppy's hands at that."

"I dare say we'll manage to get somebody," said Jim in the nettled voice which Rhoda never failed to provoke. "Will it be easy to get a furnished house, do you think, mother?"

"Not the little cosy house you want, I'm afraid, Jimmy boy. Up beyond Aunt Cotman's you might get one of those new ones Settlers built just before the war. They're always changing hands, and the military seem to be very fond of them."

"I shouldn't like it up there—too near the Cotmans," said Jim hastily. "And too far from the camp. I'd like a farmhouse at Braughing if I could get it. I'm going to take Poppy over there to-morrow."

"There's Archer's place at Braughing, father," said Mrs. Bradford. "He usually comes in Saturday morning. You'd better ask him. He's living there by himself, maybe he'd let. He's called up, anyway, and may go any day now."

They discussed the amenities of Archer's farm at Braughing for a few minutes, and then he bade them good night and went off upstairs.

Rhoda paused in her sewing when the door was closed, and nodded significantly across at her mother, getting very sleepy by the fire.

"Poppy's put him up to it, it's easy to see, mother. We're not good enough for her. I've been seeing it coming every day."

"Jim's right, though," said Isaac Bradford. "It'll be better for them both to be alone in their own house, even if it's only a hired one. She gets on very well, considering. Does anybody know whether she has heard from her own folks yet?"

"She hasn't—at least, the letter hasn't come here," said Rhoda, thus releasing the fact that she kept strict surveillance on the post-bag.

Next day Jim came home to lunch on a motor-bike with a sidecar attached, which he had borrowed from a pal at the mess, and early in the afternoon took Poppy off to Braughing to see whether they could make arrangements with Archer, either to take over his house or get rooms in it. It was a beautiful September afternoon, clear and hard, with a real autumnal feeling in the air, which was the fields were either reaped or in process of reaping, and in the unspoiled parts of the moor the glory of the heather was yet undimmed.

"Oh, isn't this lovely, Jimmie? Couldn't we have a motor-bike?" asked Poppy enthusiastically.

"I might pick up a second-hand one, or arrange with Philbeach to share this with him. He's always a hard-up beggar, so he might entertain the proposition. There's Braughing in front. Isn't it a pretty spot?"

"It's heavenly," assented Poppy enthusiastically. "It's just near enough to the camp, and yet not too near. I shall love it here, Jimmie; we simply must have a shelter of some sort here, if we go down on our knees to get it."

"I hope that won't be necessary," said Jim dully "but if it's true what Rhoda says about servants—"

"What did Rhoda say about servants?"

"That they can't be got."

"We never had any trouble at home. There were always servants," said Poppy vaguely. "When one got married or left, another just came in automatically."

"That would be called good house-keeping, I suppose, but you see, up here all the available young women are working at munitions, making high wages, and losing all taste for the humdrum housework."

"I suppose so, but don't let's worry. If we get the house we'll get somebody to help run it. Anyway, I've learnt to make pancakes and Yorkshire pasties, Jimmie; I'll feed you on these till you rebel."

Duncan Sisters At Prince Edward

The Duncan Sisters have broken records in vaudeville and musical comedy all over the country, and in the opinion of this critic, they are on their way to repeat this pleasant experience in their first talking picture. "It's a Great Life," which opened yesterday at the Prince Edward Theatre.

"It's a Great Life" not only gives the big public of the Duncans a brand-new assembly of gags and songs, but it presents the girls in a strong, well-sustained story, in which they demonstrate that they can not only sing, but act mightily well whenever required.

Rosetta Duncan, famous for clowning, does several bits of pathos in the picture, particularly her parting from Jed Prouty to go to her sister, which are definite gems of the acting art. Vivian, also, has splendid acting opportunities which she handles splendidly. Lawrence Gray scores as Jimmy, and other players include George Perlolet, George Davis, Dudley Chambers and Wiley Watson.

Everybody will want to know about the songs the two girls sing in the production. There are six of them, all peaches. Nine-tenths of last night's audience, for example, went out humming "Following You," which fits the Duncan Sisters perfectly, because, like all the others, it was "made to order."

"It's a Great Life" was filmed with technicolor sequences, which adds charm to the costumes and scenic effects.

Terribly Weak

Strength Regained Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"After the birth of my baby I was terribly weak," says Mrs. Jos. Morasse, Dupuy, Que., "and could not sleep or do my housework. I was despondent and was afraid I would be a constant invalid. I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and before long my health was restored and I could do my housework without fatigue. Since then I have used these Pills on two other occasions, with splendid result."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills enrich and purify the blood. That is why better sleep, steady nerves, improved appetite and increased vigor follow their use—all these can be yours if you start treatment to-day. The Pills are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Anniversary Services In Pownal Church

Sunday, July 6th, marked the sixtieth (60th) anniversary of the former Methodist, now the United, Church of Pownal. The anniversary was appropriately observed with special speakers and music. Three services were held, two on Sunday—morning and evening—and one Monday evening.

One pleasing feature of the service was that as many as six of those who were present at the opening and dedication of the church in 1870, were also present on Sunday, among which number was Mrs. (famously known as Aunt) Sarah Jones now in her ninety-second year.

On Sunday morning Rev. H. Pierce, B.A., of Orwell-Vernon congregation, and a former pastor of Pownal was the special preacher. Mr. Pierce has increasingly endeared himself to the people of Pownal with the years and they were delighted to hear him again and grateful to Orwell-Vernon for releasing him. He took as his text Ephesians 5:1 "Be ye imitators of God," referred to his past happy experiences as Pastor of Pownal Congregation, to the faces now absent, and then with vigor and abundant illustration he presented the Christ-centered life as God would have us live it.

The choir, under the capable hands of Mr. J. A. Moore, Director, and Mrs. A. Judson, Organist, rendered the Anthems "Lead On, O King Eternal" and "O for a Closer Walk with God."

In the evening the church was filled to capacity and then extra seats were placed in the front and rear of the church, down the aisles and in the vestibule before the three hundred and more, constituting the congregation, were seated. Mr. Pierce was again present and assisted the minister of the church in the devotional opening.

The Rev. Dr. Clarence MacKinnon, Principal of Pine Hill Divinity Hall, was then welcomed as the special preacher and introduced for the first time to a Pownal audience. Dr. MacKinnon was at his best and leaves behind an inspiring memory of his visit. Referring to the long 118 years history of Pownal congregation, he said that the origin of this church's life dates back to the time when Wesley faced the supreme decision of his life and began that great evangelistic movement which stirred the English nation. The speaker chose as his text Matthew 10:8 "Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, cast out devils," and in beautiful simplicity and with apt illustration he showed how that these commands are carried out today as we co-operate with God in his orderly ways of working. "Far be it from me," said Dr. MacKinnon in the course of his sermon, "to discount faith cure, but who can compute the lives saved by Jenner's Antitoxin, or the thousands of lives saved by Lister's Antiseptic remedy, or the hundreds of thousands of lives saved by the knowledge and application of scientific surgery." In stirring eloquence he pleaded for the fullest cooperation for the returned soldier to-day.

At both morning and evening services the minister, Rev. H. E. Campbell, read an historical sketch of the congregation which was of great interest to the elderly members present.

TWO QUALITIES -- RED LABEL & ORANGE PEKOE

On Monday evening, continuing the anniversary, there was a special young people's service at which the Rev. E. M. Aitken of Cornwall was a very illuminating address on David Livingstone. In graphic manner he took his audience through the youth and missionary travels of this remarkable man until the time when, in the heart of Africa, he fell on sleep. The fitting climax of his life was that natives buried his heart in Africa four of the faithful tenderly bore him to the coast and the nation interred him among her illustrious sons in West-minster Abbey. Apart from the address the program was in the hands of the choir. They were assisted by Mr. Malcolm MacKinnon of Charlottetown, who sang two solos, and Mr. William Green, who gave two instrumental selections. Miss Francis Wood sang a solo the words of which were written by Rev. Mr. Thompson and the music supplied by Professor Fletcher, late of Trinity Church, Charlottetown.

The church was beautifully decorated, for all services, under the direction of Mrs. W. A. M. MacRae and her sister Miss Elizabeth MacRae, Mrs. Purselov of Mass., who was present at the dedication in 1870, donated masses of Regal Lilies, sent by her son from Boston for the occasion.

Summer COLDS

Quick Relief from any Cold, Sore Throat, Headache or Other Pain

ASPIRIN
DON'T treat a "slight cold" lightly! The discomfort of a summer cold can easily develop into dangerous illness if neglected. A tablet or two of Aspirin will check a cold as quickly as it came. And you will get immediate relief from the headache that goes with it. If there's a sore throat, too, crush 2 tablets in 4 tablepoons of water, and gargle. Those who have learned the true value of Aspirin are never without it in any season of the year. It's always ready to relieve headaches, neuritis, neuralgia, and a long list of aches and pains; see proven directions in each package. Aspirin does not depress the heart or upset the stomach. Druggists everywhere have it.
