Seven Sailed For Pleasure

By Graham Yorks. (Continued from Page 9) The man nodded. "I have a rather particular reason for having a look at that box," he told her earnestly, "because I believe it contains something that is very important to someone else, and I believe that Sir Timothy is deliberately withholding that something against this person for reasons that will rebound to his credit. It is in order to save that person the pain such an exposure would assuredly bring that I feel

I must lay my hands on that document at all costs. Do you understand that, my dear?

CHILD MUST LEARN TO DEAL WITH PETS Most homes in this country shelter beloved pets, usually a dog, a cat, a bird. This being so, it is clear that we must teach children to understand about dogs and cats. They must not be afraid of them because wherever they go they will meet them and people will expect that they show kindness and understanding friendliness to the house pets. Fear of them will make serious complications.

Cats usually retreat from those who dislike or fear them. They make no attempt to hold their own unless attacked. But a dog must stand his ground and will do so. Now dogs smell fear instantly and the scent makes them afraid and they are instantly on guard. A child who fears a dog is more likely to be bitten by him than the child who has no fear of him.

Teach children to respect dogs as creatures who have feelings that can be hurt, that have minds that can be shocked and frightened into a defensive attack but which can be loved into gentleness, into a loyalty that holds until death.

Never touch a strange dog, says Angelo Patri. Speak gently to him and let him take a long, long sniff of you. Don't approach a strange dog carrying a stick or anything that looks like a weapon.

There is no telling when a child may need his dog's help, so teach the child to know and love and understand him.
