VALEDICTORY DELIVERED AT ST. DUNSTAN'S

is a characteristic of pleasure that we rarely recognize it as such until after it is gone. We often experience more real enjoyment in recalling the past, than we felt during the actual occurrence of what gives rise to these pleasant memories. We love to stand in fancy on the place where we have often stood before and recall old scenes. 'Tis delightful to lose ourselves in the "fiction of the tions of life are connected with our

Alma Mater. The memories of the various episodes of college days remain fresh and vivid, never to be effaced. Our work at our Alma Mater is completed. We must say farewell. Little wonder that the word should linger on our lips. There are thoughts that often lie too deep for speech, like the silent melodies of a musician's heart which are never to roll forth from harp or voice. At such a time silence is the acme of eloquence. It must appear to those who have attended previous commencements that this leave taking is but the observance of a custom, but to the graduate it has a far different significance. For him it means saying (Continued on page 8.)
