Eagle Not Hero He Was Thought

NEW YORK, July 17 (CP)—The bald eagle, the chosen emblem of the United States, is not the courageous bird of prey that defends its home with its very life that some people believe. A new Smithsonian Institution book, written by Arthur Cleveland Bent of Taunton, Mass., after long study of the eagle, shows that the eagle in real life is not too fond of the hard work involved in veyring. It lives mostly on dead fish and small animals it can easily overcome in combat. It does not build its home on top of a tall tree. Some of them have been known to build their nests at ground level, says Mr. Bent, and when a human intrudes, the bald eagle just "plain vacates."
