CHRISTIAN TRAINING

The purpose of Christianity is to train men and women in the school of Christ until their training is exchanged for Christian practice. Vision is exchanged for experience. There has always been need in the world for those who see visions and dream dreams. For a long period in life visions play an important part. The man and woman who stand at a marriage altar are realizing a dream and vision which have possessed them for years. When an artist places the last touch upon the canvas and the engineer drives the last spike in the railroad through the mountain they too realize the vision of a lifetime. But more than vision is needed. Out of dream and vision come experiences which are more valuable than all else on earth. If a day comes when a man ceases to see visions, let him thank God that life has given him a greater treasure in the richness that only experience imparts. Material values are exchanged for spiritual. By a power which God alone imparts man may be turned from idols and made to serve the living God; may be made free from the slavery of passion and shame and transformed into a saint. Then, some bright day, when the sun is up, the sorrows of earth will be exchanged for the bliss of Heaven.

disregarding any urge to come there. They love to disport themselves in yard puddles and thawing streamlets but so far have shown no liking for the pond or mill stream. Now, the Pekins we once had, would be gone at the first opportunity, without a by-your-leave and many a morning's work indoors was sacrificed to searching them out in a nesting place: beside the deep pool below the dam, where the water descends in a white spray or away up "the crick," which is a duck's Paradise. Wagons and cars were on this road of ours this morning and sleighs along the fields which continue to hold a light coverlet of snow. This was a fortunate state of affairs for our men today since the last of the threshing was done this afternoon. "That stack" which has sat so placidly up the rise from the buildings, at the line, since harvest days, was hauled by sleighs to the barn and threshed. The wind had risen by this time and was blowing coldly down from the North, but it did not seem to hamper the work at hand.

Rob was a helper as was the younger lad from the house on the hill. The threshing was completed by supper time which now that evenings have lengthened does not await the lamp-lighting but comes before the evening choring has commenced. James expressed himself as well pleased with their afternoon's work and with the condition of the sheaves, which notwithstanding having been set in place by an inexperienced hand—Rob's— had been able to withstand rain and wind and snow. "I never before remember" James remarked "threshing a stack so late as this, before." And what did we have for the meal? Vegetable soup — piping hot and much appreciated in the coldness. Thickened, near to the serving time, by the addition of a handful of wheatlets, the cereal that slips through ones fingers like Summer sands on the sea-shore and was a favorite breakfast food of Jamie's during his stay with us. Thinly sliced cold roast and an accompanying mustard dressing, for if James and I were cast up on a desert island and we happened to have pork or its products to lunch upon, James would be apt to ask: "Did you fetch the mustard, Ellen?" Bread and rolls; pieces of a white cake, left I confess from the Sunday one. "A bit dry" James remarked when he bit into it. And doughnuts, heated for Rob, and "as is" for James. There was also the remainder of a rice pudding left over from dinner. It had little missing from it for James had been rather hurried then. Rice is a more respected food now that it has advanced in price to attain admittance to the luxury class but it is only as wholesome and filling as it was in its humbler days.

Filling? Not altogether for James asks me, now that every chore has been done, and our care are at rest; "There wouldn't be any of that rice left would there, Ellen?"

Until tomorrow — Diary — Goodnight.

Senator McIntyre Opposes Oleomargarine In Canada

Following is the text of an address in the Senate, May 18, by Hon. J. P. McIntyre on the proposed amendment to the Dairy Industry Bill to permit the sale of oleomargarine in Canada:

Hon. J. P. McIntyre: Honourable senators, in rising to say a few words in connection with this bill, I realize that it was before this honourable body just a year ago and was then voted down by a small majority. The honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) has seen fit to reintroduce it this year, and rightly so. He has the right to put forward all the arguments and muster all the strength he possibly can in order to carry this bill through this House.

I appreciate the sincerity and the ability of the honourable senator in the case that he has made out in favour of oleomargarine. But it must be realized that there are differing views in this chamber, and anybody who takes a different view has an equal right to muster all the strength and put forward all the arguments he possibly can in order to express the views of the people whom he represents in the Parliament of Canada.

SENATOR J. P. McINTYRE

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McIntyre: It was, I believe, in 1918 that legislation was passed to prohibit the importation and manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in Canada. In 1922 Parliament legalized the sale of oleomargarine; and in 1923 it reversed that decision, rescinding or repealing the act of the previous year. So the legislation was in force for one year.

Something Wrong

There must have been something wrong with legislation that was left on the statute books for only one year. I do not know the circumstances, but I have been told in the Department of Agriculture that there was so much indignation throughout Canada that year that the government of the day was forced to repeal the act at the following session. That may or may not be the case. The honourable member from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) may be better informed than I am.

Hon. Mr. Euler: That is not quite correct.

Hon. Mr. McIntyre: That is not quite correct. However that may be, representing as I do an agricultural province, I am here to voice in this honourable chamber the views of the people of that Province. Last year I received a resolution on the subject from the Dairymen's Association of Prince Edward Island; and this year, again, I have had a letter from them confirming the opposition they voiced a year ago to the manufacture and use of oleomargarine.

If honourable members will bear with me for just a few moments I shall read the resolution. I was not here last year when the discussion took place and I do not know whether or not this resolution was read in this chamber at this time. It puts forth the views of both the dairy industry and those who are associated with it in the province which I represent.

Quotes P. E. I. Resolution

The resolution reads:

"Whereas, the maintenance of soil fertility should at all times be the main object of the farmers,

"And whereas, it has long been recognized by agricultural authorities that dairying is the one branch of farming that tends the best to maintain this fertility and anything that might be done to weaken the dairy industry would reflect unfavourably upon agriculture in general by lessening its purchasing power which in turn might disturb the whole economy set-up,

"And whereas, the present shortage of butter is only temporary, caused in part by an unwillingness of labour to engage in agricultural work, a scarcity of dairy equipment, and partly by a greater quantity of milk being diverted into the fluid milk trade rather than into churning cream caused by the low price paid for butter fat in comparison to that paid for fluid milk,

"And whereas, during the war years the dairy farmers of Canada, under great difficulties and at a financial sacrifice, valiantly maintained the production line, a feat only made possible by overtime work and family labour,

"And whereas, anything that might cause the farmers of Canada to turn their attention from dairying to other lines of agriculture such as the production of poultry, hogs, beef, grain or potatoes, lines that would be more attractive to labour and allowance of shorter hours, but would at the same time rob other people, especially the children, of a food which cannot be replaced for its nutritional value by any other commodity,

"Therefore, be it resolved, that we, the Prince Edward Island Dairymen's Association oppose most strongly the passage of the bill now before the Canadian Senate having for its object the manufacture and sale within Canada of oleomargarine, a substance produced by the products of cheap labour in other lands where a lower standard of living prevails than that which we would like to see for our own Canadian people."

May Prove Disastrous

You may see from that resolution that its sponsors are afraid that if this bill becomes law the farmers of Prince Edward Island will give their attention to the production of other lines besides those of the dairy industry. Prince Edward Island is a potato-growing Province and if the farmers turn their attention to growing potatoes in larger quantities than they are now doing and thus forget the production of cream and butter, I am afraid that would prove disastrous.

At the present time we have in storage more than three million bushels of seed potatoes and a million and a half bushels of table stock potatoes. Had it not been for the contract that we were able to make with the British Government for the sale of three million bushels, I do not know what would have happened.

At this time a year ago we had only a little over a million and a half bushels of seed potatoes and 700,000 bushels of table stock potatoes, so we have two million bushels more than we had at this time last year. Our transportation has been a problem in Prince Edward Island for years, and anything that tends to hamper it has a detrimental effect on the population.

To give you an idea of the transportation problem across the straits—for which purpose at the present time we have only one boat but are hoping to have a new one by June 15 that will eliminate our difficulties to a considerable extent—I might say that it would take 5,980 cars to transport that many potatoes.

The railroad in Prince Edward Island is planning to replace steam engines by electric or diesel engines so as not to have to transport coal to supply the steam engines. If this bill is passed in the Senate and in the other house, which I very much doubt, oleomargarine would be another nuisance to be transported across the ferry.

Huge Surplus

To give you an idea of the agricultural activities in the Maritime Provinces, I may say that at the present time we have over nine million bushels of potatoes in storage, that is, 5,092,630 bushels more than there were at this time a year ago; and in the whole of Canada there are a little less than 12 million bushels of potatoes in storage, or 6,588,687 bushels more than last year.

That is, the Maritime Provinces have nine of the twelve million bushels in the whole Dominion of Canada. We do not want anything that would be harmful to our agricultural activities.

Opposition to this bill is not confined to Prince Edward Island and the other Maritime Provinces. I received from the secretary of the Ontario Creamery Association a telegram protesting against the bill. No doubt other honourable senators received the same telegram, and with permission of the House I should like to place it on Hansard:

"We vigorously protest proposal to legalize oleomargarine in Canada, as a blow at the farmers of Ontario. During the war we accepted with good grace diversion of milk from butter to other commodities as in the Dominion's interest. We have accepted with good grace importation of New Zealand butter to make up for the current artificial shortage. Imposition of oleomargarine would be a serious blow to 71,000 cream producers of the province of Ontario, - - -

Averaging five persons to a family, that would represent between three and four hundred thousand people in Ontario.

"- - -, and a poor reward for sacrifices still being exacted by the Federal Government. We solicit your support for agriculture, and would urgently request you to vote against the proposed oleomargarine bill.

"A. S. Thurston, Secretary-Manager, Ontario Creamery Association."

Ontario Farmers Interested

That alone, coming as it does from his own province, should influence my honourable friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) not to proceed further with this bill. I think it would be in the interest both of Ontario farmers and the honourable senator from Waterloo if he would consent to withdraw the bill.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I am thinking of the consumers of this country as a whole.

Hon. Mr. McIntyre: The consumers?

Hon. Mr. Euler: Yes.

Hon. Mr. McIntyre: My honourable friend said in his speech, if I remember rightly, something about 118,000 dairy cattle which were sold in Canada and shipped to the United States last year.

That is good business, and it has always been going on.

Hon. Mr. Euler: We are not objecting to it.
