CHAPTER VIII

Girl and Boy

Sally had a beautiful time up on the top deck. To be sure, the junior officer, a nice boy by the name of Leigh, after he had established her in a deck chair, did try to take her hand.

"It's half past twelve." "Do you want me to take you down?" "Oh, yes, Myra will be shocked at me."

Myra was.

When Sally appeared in the door

"That's really funny."

"Why?"

"Because it isn't true."

He could have told her why. He had been lucky enough to get her to come up on the boat deck.

She would most certainly have let him hold her hand. He was convinced of that, men usually know. But of course he wouldn't tell Sally.

There was something about her that made him suddenly unwilling to try to make love to her, which was extraordinary.

"Oh, yes it is true," he returned, accepting her lightness of manner.

After that, they talked generalities, and Sally's laugh rang out often.

The moon and the fact that she was talking to a good-looking man conspired to keep her there later than she believed possible.

When she looked at her wrist watch she was scandalized.

"It's half past twelve."

"Do you want me to take you down?"

Mount Allison won from Dalhousie at Halifax by a score of 2 to 0 and an interesting battle should result when the leaders meet for the sectional honors.

Hockey at Victoria, Albany St.

Pats vs. Victoria Unions.

Thursday night Feb. 10th, before an immense crowd of hockey fans the famed St. Pats met the redoubtable Unions. At 9 o'clock the game was on and almost from the face off Taylor (Unions), scored on a clever pass from Lea, and soon again registered, this time a pass from "Snider", this ended the scoring for the period, as the St. Pats defense tightened up considerably.

The second period was real hockey right from the face off, and although hard driven the St. Pats played an admirable game with Saunders very much in evidence, but Victoria clearly demonstrated that "in Union there is strength", and although the visitors were a clever bunch individually, they were far outclassed, and again the Unions scored, this time on a brilliant end to end dash by Crill Lea. The third showed the boys in green full of pep and going strong, but as before, the Union team work was superior, and bitterly contesting the play they were forced back, and in a hard battle almost directly in front of their goal, Howatt rang up goal number four for the Unions, and the St. Pats ended their second defeat this season.
