"WHAT YOUR HUSBAND NEEDS"

"One night my husband came home looking so ill and worn out that I thought he would faint. I knew there had been something wrong with him for some time, but I could not get him to tell me what it was. Finally he confessed he was tired and sore all over. I made him go to bed. Next morning he insisted upon going to work although he was anything but well. I knew that his trouble was partly due to worry because for some months before he had been out of work. This put us so heavily in debt that the grocer and butcher refused to give us more credit. It was being out of work that worried my husband. He wouldn't eat because he was afraid there would not be enough food for the children. We were so poor that we had to keep the children from school because they had no clothes. I knew that if I could only get my husband strong and well again everything would be all right. He is a carpenter by trade and in good health earns good wages and he is always sober and industrious. But I knew that it was impossible for any man to do good work when he was ill and worried. I decided to speak to our old family doctor, who had retired from practice. When I explained how we were situated he gladly offered to do all he could to help us, although he didn't like to interfere with the new doctor's practice. Finally he said, 'What your husband needs is a good tonic and I know of nothing better than Carnol.' I thought that if our old family doctor recommends Carnol it must be all right. On my way home I got all bottle and before the first bottle had been used, my husband was a changed man. After he had taken four bottles his appetite returned, he had more energy, that tired look in his eyes disappeared and what is most important his wages have been more than doubled and he is now superintendent of the wood working shop in which he formerly worked as a carpenter. Thanks to Carnol our troubles are over and we are once more a happy and contented family."

Carnol is sold by your druggist, and if you can conscientiously say, after you have tried it, that it hasn't done you any good, return the empty bottle to him and he will refund your money. 10-622 For Sale By Hughes' Drug Store

A Sweetheart at Thirty

THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION By Marion Rubincam

HELEN COMES Chapter 63

If we created a sensation when we arrived with our new clothes and what Jim called our "city us all into shadow. Violet drove over to the railroad station to meet her, and when they came up to the house, it was at the slack time of the day—when the men were coming in from the fields for supper, when the children were assembled in their own yards waiting the announcement of the meal and when a member or so of each family was out on the porch. I went out to meet them when I heard the horse coming. Like all country folks, we knew the peculiar characteristics of our own horses, and could distinguish their way of trotting from the sound made by all the other horses. I had the buggy with the top down, and there was Helen, hatless and coatless, in a green flannel smock over a white flannel skirt, the smock trimmed with colored embroidered wool roses, and her short hair blowing in the wind. I was used to seeing her in bizarre costume, and of course, short hair was no novelty to me after my winter in the art student's quarter of the city. "Hello! It's heavenly to see you both again," she cried, jumping over the wheel before the carriage had stopped. "I've got a little surprise for you," she said, "and I'm crazy over it already. That view from the hill-top a mile back on the road is the most wonderful thing! Do those hills always develop that misty purple on the horizon? I shall write a poem about it. Oh!" "This last was because I turned to Esther, who came out to greet the guest. I introduced them, and then Jim who came around on the porch and finally James who, I knew, was eager to meet this girl that we talked of so much. The greetings were lacking in enthusiasm. A sudden chill fell on all of us. I forgot entirely that a setting sun, animals—symbolic ones worked into the design, and the whole on orange silk to suggest the golden haze over the fields." "This was language new to her hearers. Esther made a supreme effort at polite conversation. "What a pity you had an accident to your hair," she said. "Did you burn it, or did you have a fever, or that you had to cut it off?" Helen stared in a puzzled manner and then laughed. "Oh, I bobbed it because I like it so. Gives me more time to do things I prefer. Really, combing hair is a waste of energy—unless long hair suits one's type. Enid looks best with her hair high, as she has it now, and Vi with hers in a debutante knot." "There was a silence. Helen broke it by asking, "Do you mind if I smoke? I get so restless in the evenings when I don't. Besides that sunset should be viewed through a haze of smoke." Jim got up deliberately and left us. Esther had not the power to move. Ouch! My Back! Rub Lumbago Pain Away

St. Jacob's Oil stops any pain, so when your back is sore and lame, or lumbago, sciatica or rheumatism has you stiffened up, don't suffer. Get a small trial bottle of old, honest St. Jacob's Oil at any drug store, pour a little in your hand, and rub it right on your aching back; and by the time you count fifty the soreness and lameness is gone. Don't stay crippled! This soothing, penetrating oil needs to be used only once. It takes the pain right out and ends the misery. It is magical, yet absolutely harmless, and doesn't burn the skin. Nothing else stops lumbago, sciatica, backache or rheumatism so promptly. It never disappoints!

—of course the hired men stared their eyes out, but that was to be expected. But James seemed to like Helen as she talked. He lost his sullen look, he even talked a little to her, and his rather sleepy eyes lit up several times. Since the day of the quarrel when Jim had smashed the boy's workshop, James had not uttered a word at any meal. "Do you think the neighbors will see her?" Esther whispered to me fearfully as we gathered up the dishes. "I suppose so, why not?" I answered, on the defensive at once. "Well, she says she's going upstairs to get into something cool. Esther said, 'Let's hope it isn't full of whatever she called those things on the funny waist she wore.' "They wear a lot of wool embroidery on clothes in the city," I said crossly.

But if Esther objected to the very smart flannel smock and skirt that Helen wore on the trip, she gasped at the cool frock and came down to the porch in. Like many girls in that part of New York, Helen had "gone in" for Batik silk, in the leisure left over from running her tea room. She came down now in a long shapely gown of silk batiked in a cobwebby design that covered it the silk itself shading from deep purple at her feet, through lavender into rose, and through shell pink around her face. A strange design that suggested gazelles and trees and birds was done over the front in blues and greens. The whole had taken a great deal of work and, as I knew, was worth many hundreds of dollars. "I shall do a scarf like that view of the fields in front," Helen said. "Green tress around the top, and a setting sun, animals—symbolic ones worked into the design, and the whole on orange silk to suggest the golden haze over the fields."

"Broken Wing"

A Jump-spark Romance of Modern Mexico BY PAUL DICKEY AND CHAS. W. GODDARD

From the Sensationally Successful Play Novelized by Charles W. Goddard.

"This was the second time he had asked that question of her. With all the emphasis and conviction she could assume Inez said: "I am not dead." "Strange," he muttered, touching her arm again, "and yet you seem to hear me talking to you don't you?" "Yes, I hear you. Everything is all right. "And you are able to see me." She nodded. "And you see Jerry too?" "No, Jerry is gone." "Yes," he admitted. "Jerry is gone just now. But he was here a minute ago." "No," she said quietly. "Jerry is dead." "I know that I know he is dead. We are all dead and yet it seems all just the same as before except that it is so hard to remember anything. Is it hard for you to remember?" The girl did not discuss the point. Instead, she induced him to sit down in one of old Farley's home made steamer chairs. "You must never mind Jerry," he remarked after a long pause, "I remember your face, but I can't remember your name." "It is Inez Villera." "Inez Villera—isn't that a strange name?" "It may sound strange to you it is Mexican." "Mexican—did you live in Mexico?" "This is Mexico Meester, don't you understand we are living in Mexico now?" "Living—living—isn't that funny he rubbed his eyes and sighed hopelessly. "Now leesten, Meester, what is your name?" "Name," repeated Phil, stupidly while a sense of humiliation swept him. It is always mortifying to confess ignorance of what one should know, but to have to admit to a pretty girl that one doesn't even know one's own name means dropping far down in the animal kingdom to rank below the dog, cat or even the horse. "Why, yes, my name, of course," he stammered, "it's right on the tip of my tongue. How perfectly ridiculous that I could forget that. Wait a minute. Oh, Jerry, you must never mind Jerry, she ordered quietly. Perhaps I can help you. Would you know from the first letters if I tell you. "Why sure of course I would. "All right—I find them in your clothes when they put you in your name," and she mentioned the name of an American underwear manufacturer. "The youth repeated the initials but they evoked no whisper from his forgotten life. He mournfully shook his head. It was useless. Inez could sense the man's despair. She tried another tack: "Well, look, see—you remember that. It is your aeroplane." "Yes." "You came in that." "Yes," he said eagerly; it confirmed the only wisp of memory he possessed. "Do you remember the big storm?" "The storm, the storm," he repeated. He could almost remember it—at least something of it. Leaning against the plane, he stared some moments blankly struggling to bridge the gap. But not a single echo came back from the frozen sea of his lost memory. "Drip, drip, drip" he muttered pointing at a leak in the radiator. Liz smiled Farley watching. "Father won't his memory come back?" "I hope so." "But you are not sure." "No, sometimes it never returns." "Can't we do anything to help him?" "I don't know. If his memory does return, it will be when we least expect it. Sometimes a great shock, a blow on the head or even some trivial thing like a sound or a smell, anything may do it—or nothing. But anyway we will try. Well, young man, are you feeling any better?" "Yes sir, I think so." Phil decided that for a change he would ask questions. "Do you live here?" "Yes, this is my place. That's my little girl over there. At least he is the same as mine. I brought her up ever since she was a baby. I'm an American and I've been living down in Mexico a good many years." "Mexico," the boy repeated the word. Something told him that it was a foreign country and that his own country was America. Yet he could not have told a single fact about either land. Farley nodded. "This is Mexico, and this place is about 150 miles from the border. You are an American living in Mexico. Why do you live in Mexico?"

—of course the hired men stared their eyes out, but that was to be expected. But James seemed to like Helen as she talked. He lost his sullen look, he even talked a little to her, and his rather sleepy eyes lit up several times.
