Helping The Dejected

From France comes the report of a great work that is being done to ease shock of severe wounds and to get men over the first few critical days after they are faced with the stark fact of amputation. The story tells of two soldiers, one lacking an arm and the other a leg, who are making it their mission to tour the hospitals, giving cheery demonstrations of the fact that, despite their handicaps, life is still very much worth living, and that they are not "on the shelf."

These men are examples of a great company who are engaged in the same sort of work. Wherever broken soldiers lie, there are those who will come to them and shed light in their darkness, bearing the glad news that, even without a leg or an arm, a man is still the greatest of God's creatures, and is still able to face the future confident and unafraid.

On Saluting The Flag

To the suggestion that respect for the Union Jack should be taught in public schools, the Ottawa Journal comments: The Flag and the National Anthem are symbols that speak to us of our great traditions, of our proud place in a company of nations called the British Commonwealth, and symbols are important in the development of national spirit and pride.

There was a melancholy period between the wars when the world was infected with a variety of ills—gross materialism, economic uncertainty, widespread mistrust and suspicion of people's and nations' motives. In those days it came to be old-fashioned to profess a belief in King and Country, and parents who as children had sung "Soldiers of the Queen" with fervor as Canadians marched off to war in South Africa saw their own children a bit suspicious about the whole thing. Their attitude, in fact, was not surprising, because we were plagued with learned persons, especially a little group of college professors, who assured them the poor old British Empire was on its last legs and never had been much good anyhow, and that Canada was no better than an appendage to an obnoxious "imperialistic" system. This was wholly false, but it had its effect, and for a period a person was considered "behind the times" in this country if he spoke up wholeheartedly for Britain and the British connection. Even in Parliament cautious politicians played softly on the theme—some of them still do.

Canada's Contribution

That the United Kingdom has made greater sacrifices than either the United States or Canada in respect of nutritional levels; but that the present diet of that country, restricted though it is, could not have been maintained without the contributions received from these two countries, is the opinion expressed in a review of the British Ministry of Foods for the year 1944 as outlined in a report from Frederic Hudd, Chief Canadian Trade Commissioner in the United Kingdom. The review is summarized by Mr. Hudd contains information about the trends and policies in relation to the consumption of food in the United Kingdom which, in Mr. Hudd's opinion "should be of guidance to Canadian firms interested in this market."

The Ministry's work during the year, said Mr. Hudd, was an essential background to the invasion of the continent. Heavy calls were made on food and shipping resources, and both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Food emphasized in public utterances that rationing must continue for some time after the war. Assurance was however given that some improvements in standards and variety in national diet would follow upon the defeat of Germany. Mr. Hudd deals with various commodities, and in connection with fruit declares that "Good supplies of Canadian dessert apples began to arrive in November. The earlier apples were distributed in the North of England and Scotland, which had received less than their share of home-grown dessert apples."

National flour, he states, is now milled solely from wheat, except in a few areas where the inclusion of 2 1/2 per cent rye is authorized. Some complaints were made about the quantity of pork which often made up the nutritional ration, and the Ministry had to explain to the public that because of the diversion of much of this meat from Australia, New Zealand and South America to Allied forces in the Pacific, the United Kingdom had to rely more upon North American supplies, much of which had been pork.

Hugo Recalled

Hitler's appeals to God in his hopelessness (says Montreal Gazette) recall the passage that Victor Hugo wrote on the defeat of Napoleon. For to Victor Hugo the battle of Waterloo was not man's victory over the Napoleonic power, but the rejection of Napoleon by the universe. It was God Himself who had found Napoleon intolerable. This passage, which appears in chapter IX of the second volume of Les Misérables, has a remarkable bearing upon the situation of this hour: Was it possible for Napoleon to win the battle? We answer in the negative. Why? . . . On account of God. . . It was time for this vast man to fall. His excessive weight in human destiny disturbed the balance. This individual alone was of more account than the universal group. Such extremes of human power concentrated in a single head—the world mounting to one man's brain—would be fatal to civilization, if they endured. The moment had come for the incorruptible and supreme equity to reflect; and it is probable that the principles and elements on which the regular gravitations of the moral order, as well as of the material order depend, had rebelled. Steaming blood, overcrowded graveyards, mothers in tears, are formidable pleaders. When the earth suffers from an excessive burden, there are mysterious groans from the shadow which the abyss hears. Napoleon had been denounced in the infinite, and his fate was decided. He wore God. Waterloo was not a battle, but a change of front on the part of the universe.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The City Council is now in the happy position of having an organization to arrange a detailed programme for V-Day to be put in effect the moment the glad tidings reaches us.

It is a note for the reminiscences — on how on the home front we helped the war effort by loosely prohibiting liquor so that the boot-licker could achieve a fat and tax-free income.

To such a pass has come Democratic Government under Prime Minister King that we have the relations between the Dominion and Saskatchewan being discussed in correspondence instead of on the floor of the House.

Air Vice-Marshal Godfrey, C. C. F. defeated candidate in Grey North before his retirement from the R. C. A. F. enjoyed a salary of $4,800. Now, at the age of 54 his R. C. A. F. pension is $5,730. That isn't indicative of war sacrifice, remarks The Printed Word.

Gold first discovered in Australia—in New South Wales—this date 1851; the outcome was a sudden rush of immigrants to the newly discovered gold area, including Victoria, the population increasing from 400,000 to 1,200,000 in the course of ten years; these two States obtained responsible government in 1855, South Australia and Tasmania in 1856, Queensland in 1859, and Western Australia in 1890, when gold was discovered there; in 1901, all the States were united as the Commonwealth of Australia.

An order further co-ordinating the collection and purchasing of supplies for Allied countries is announced by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board acting under instructions from the Government by which appeals for donations of clothing and supplies by voluntary relief agencies are placed under permit to be secured through the National War Services Department. The new order will ensure that the claims of all relief organizations upon Canadian supplies will be properly co-ordinated with production and distribution programs covering war and essential civilian and relief requirements. All relief agencies have been notified to discontinue any current campaigns and have been requested to submit their applications to the Department of National War Services for consideration. Donations or purchases of supplies for distribution in Canada or for Canadian armed forces or merchant seamen are specifically exempted from this restriction.

Policemen in the exercise of their duties are at times molested by people with whom they are in contact, but they must not use excessive violence, held Mr. Justice Philmon Cousineau, in a judgment handed down in Montreal Superior Court. He condemned the city of Montreal and Constable Rosaire Huneault, of the city force, to jointly and severally pay Francois Joseph Corbeil, a restaurant keeper, the sum of $213 as damages for injuries received when the constable arrested Corbeil in front of his restaurant. Corbeil had caused Huneault to take him to the station on a charge of being drunk and disorderly, a charge to which he later pleaded guilty before the recorder. At the station, however, Huneault struck him, and Corbeil had to be taken to hospital for treatment. His Lordship said the constable should have shown all the more coolness when noticing that Corbeil was in liquor, and, furthermore, Huneault should not have arrested him without finding out where he lived, since he was taken in front of his own property.

London commentators draw attention to the following message from the News Chronicle's Moscow correspondent, Paul Winterton. His message carries some weight since he is usually well-informed and is writing from Moscow itself: "Now that Marshal Zhukov is nearer to Berlin than London is to Brighton, there is the temptation to imagine that the Red Army will be inside the German capital in a matter of days, but I am sure this is a temptation that should be resisted. Marshal Zhukov's men have been on the move at a breakneck pace for three weeks without a single pause. They have reached a broad river behind which the Germans are known to have constructed a modern system of steel and concrete defences of great strength and depth. They are approaching the very heart of the enemy's communication system. Such reserves as the Germans possess are certainly disposed to move effectively in defence of the Oder line east of their capital. Let us make the mistake of over-optimism, which we have made so often in the past. I think we should ask ourselves whether it is a very attractive military proposition for an army to thrust forward in a narrow spearhead across a wide defended river line, and make a frontal attack on one of the greatest single built-up areas in the world. Unless the Germans are really on their last legs, it would seem to be asking for trouble to do that, and I do not believe the Russians will try. . . . In the days just ahead of us, I think we should be wise to think in terms of Koenigsberg, Poznan, Elbing, Danzig, Gdynia and the approaches to Stettin, rather than of the immediate fall of the German capital."

Notes By The Way

Some women can get money out of their husbands without half crying.—Brandon Sun.

Fire broke out in the basement of a department store at Everett, Washington, but 300 women shoppers, jammed at a bargain hosiery counter refused to so much as budge. The incident is revealing in showing what stockings mean to women.—Hamilton Spectator.

"A large government notice on the front of Ottawa's government-owned railway station spells accommodation with one note: 'The Ottawa Journal. The cub report no monopoly breaking in, then, has no monopoly on the word of spelling the word.—St. Catharines Standard."

Garnet Coulter, mayor of Winnipeg, and A. W. Shackelford, mayor of St. John's, marked the opening of the new C.A. service between the two cities by an exchange of gifts. Mr. Coulter sent Mr. Shackelford a "bag of Winnipeg goldies, while the latter sent Mr. Coulter a bag of southern Alberta beef sugar in return.—Winnipeg Tribune.

Doctors say a man over fifty should not shovel snow. That excuses most of the farmers, for the average age of the farmers is that average age. Perhaps Selective Service will tell us who is going to shovel the snow.—Farmer's Advocate.

It is time something was done to remedy the injustice which is being inflicted on the pipe smoker. It is almost impossible to buy a pipe, except occasionally at a fantastic price. Meanwhile the cigarette smoker is ostentatiously well supplied. In my search for a pipe I have been told over and over again that pipe smokers are in the front lines for pipes from men at the front, or their friends there, which they are quite unable to supply.—Dr. Alfred Cox in London Times.

A navy lieutenant reported for duty at the department's huge building on Constitution Avenue in Washington. He was taken to a room where a WAVE who showed him a batch of office supplies, pencils, pads of paper, letterheads, the like. He asked her to get him a pen or inkwell. "That's all right," she said, "I'll get you a pen and ink." "You aren't going to be allowed to sign anything."—New Yorker.

Readers probably noted with a degree of amusement the recent report of the family which complained that it had been "fluorinated" (that had been in the water supply). They described symptoms of an intestinal disorder and pains in the "chemical." After listening to this report the health authorities pointed out that it was a case of mistaken identity. The fluorine had been added to the water supply as a disinfectant. The family had been told that the fluorine would somehow cause "tummys."—Brantford Expositor.

In New Brunswick we have more porcupines than a porcupine. The reason may be that we protected them for many years. This is the belief that was got lost in the woods and was pine, kill it with a stick. It is a story that is finally real. The porcupine, however, would have no woods left to go to. Then, too, nobody ever heard of a lost man. The porcupine, then, is a creature that is needed. The critics were on a porcupine bounty of 20 cents.
