Four generations of mothers have depended on Scott's Emulsion. It supplies the fortifying and body-building Vitamins "A" and "D", and is 4 TO 5 TIMES MORE DIGESTIBLE than plain Cod Liver Oil.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Mystery House

"But Flora won't inherit anyway! Why should she? The old lady will leave her something, of course. But not enough to hurt Mrs. Roy's share—or the Hibbeses' share, as it is now."

"The Hibbeses think that Mrs. Prendergast might have a motive in leaving a good deal to Flora. She may know something about Mrs. Prendergast—that would make it worth Mrs. Prendergast's while to keep friends with Flora. Page said significantly, 'Barnes Bishop sent me a purse for Christmas—do you remember? It came all done up as a gift, but there was a note in it. He told me he had found out that some one was depositing a thousand dollars a month to the account of Flora Mockbee in a San Jose bank.'

"Great Scott!" Rand ejaculated. "They suspect that Mrs. Prendergast had a quarrel with Trudy Mockbee, and that there was something queer about Trudy Mockbee's death. Doctor Ullmeyer thinks there was poisoning, or something."

Rand's face was grave, his eyes intent on hers. "Trudy Mockbee, as far as I know, died of acute gastritis, I wasn't here but the way those old girls—Trudy and Mrs. Prendergast—lived, the pastry and wine and the sauces they ate could have killed ten of them. The first thing I did was put the Duchess on a diet."

"Well, anyway, the Hibbeses want to have Mrs. Mockbee's body dug up. And now, with Mrs. Roy dying, I suppose they'll be more suspicious than ever."

"Well, people do queer things when there's money involved," said Rand. "It's probably all talk. I'm going up to see the Duchess now. Here's Lynn; you two take a walk. Had your breakfast, Lynn?"

Lynn did not answer the doctor, but when Rand had gone indoors he came closer to Page.

"Mrs. Roy died," he said, without preamble.

"I know, Lynn. But she was old and tired and sad and poor. It wasn't a hard way to go." Page felt instant concern for his air of puzzlement and distress. "I want exercise," she said cheerfully. "Wait until I get into boots and a sweater, and let's walk down to the Whistling Rocks."

"Yes, I'll wait," he said. And immediately he added, "Flora, did it, didn't she? She—now she'll want to get me. Here, you take this. I don't want to keep it any more. If anything happens to me I'd rather you had it."

They had turned toward the end of the terrace that was sheltered from sight of the house by the great oaks; they were quite alone. Page found glittering on her palm the faint pink, the key sparkle of the Prendergast diamond.

"You get away," Lynn said. "Take it with you! They'll kill me tonight. Everything—everything's all wrong!"

"You goose" Page said affectionately. "It means everything's all right!"

This part of her mission was ended now. Page had the diamond. The end of her stay at Mystery House was definitely in sight. Lynn had given it to her, without conditions or difficulties, without detectives or police.

AGING EYES NEED HELPING LENSES

Persons are unduly alarmed when they are unable to read as they once could. That is a handicap which can readily be overcome. Aging eyes need helping lenses. As this condition progresses stronger and stronger corrections are required.

Do not neglect the condition which makes reading difficult.
