The Girl Who Had No Chance

By MARION RUBINCAM

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER

Chapter 74

So, with a great deal of work, the Spring days came and went. Langley had talked a great deal about Ruth going to New York or going any place where she could rest and have a change. And Ruth always agreed and always promised, but she was so busy she never found time to go. And the whole summer went by. Ruth went out very little that summer. The people on the big estates near Marketown, who had made overtures of friendship, were away most of the time, at mountains or at the shore. The Marketown paper was growing, recorded their "doings" as though they were quite important.

Langley, at a meeting of the Civic Committee—which by now practically controlled the town—suggested certain things that should be attended to and could only be handled in New York. There was discussion about getting a New York agent, until finally Langley suggested sending Ruth. "Who knows as much about this town as any of us, and could carry out our commissions perfectly well," another member of the board agreed.

So it was that the girl suddenly found herself actually sent off for a change—if not a vacation, with all her expenses paid. And she could not refuse to go then, nor find an excuse. She tried to get her work in shape so as to leave two weeks after the notice that she was to be sent. Meantime, things had not been going well at home.

Ruth began to realize slowly that the sympathy in the house had existed solely between her father and herself. There was perfect understanding there. Between her mother and herself there was something which neither could comprehend and which neither would acknowledge—it was something as intangible as a dream, but as solid as such a barrier as a brick wall.

At the funeral, Mrs. O'Neil methodically gathered up the clothes and the various useful possessions of her husband's, and gave them to the "most worthy" man in town. Then she, as methodically, cleared out his room, sorted his books, burned up some personal belongings and labelled "trash," and prepared to rent out that room as well as all the other rooms available in the house.

"No use keeping his things," she remarked as they sat at supper one night. "His books you'll want to read again sometime, so I haven't touched them. The rest of the stuff I've cleaned out."
Ruth said nothing. But the manner in which her mother spoke.

went through her like a knife. She knew her mother was right—they would never touch nor use various little trifles that had belonged to her father. But somehow the mere fact that he had them and loved them made them sacred in her eyes—even the pipe he smoked, which now smelled of much stale tobacco. She did not want to keep the various little things—it wasn't that. It was the cold, methodical way in which her mother did it that hurt Ruth.

"Of course, we'll have to take some money and buy mourning," Mrs. O'Neil said the day before the funeral service.
"I'm not," Ruth answered.
Her mother looked shocked.
"Not wear black when your own father died!"
"Father hated black, and hated to see me in it. He often asked me not to wear mourning. Do you think it would make him feel better, or me, for us all to go about in black?"
"But what will people say?"
"Do you think I care what they say?" Ruth was roused to sudden resentment. "The ones I care about will know how much sorrow I feel without my advertising it by wearing a color father hated."

"Still—"
Mrs. O'Neil could not get over the conventional ideas. She went to the shops and brought the proper "mourning"—buying frugally so as not to spend an unnecessary cent, yet with a little satisfaction that her clothes were correct for the occasion, and that they were quite new as well. Ruth, having no money she felt she could spare, wore her old things.

That was only the beginning of a real rift in the feeling between Ruth and her mother. Mrs. O'Neil had never had much sympathy for Ruth's "bookish" tastes. She quite mainly felt that her husband's studiousness was the reason for his failure in life, and to her, Ruth was travelling the same road. Then when Ruth began earning money, the idea had to go—but she turned instead to a nagging because Ruth "wouldn't make up a little to the boys. You'll be an old maid if you're not careful!" Ruth would answer, and every time a little more resentment would creep into her voice.

"It's a pity Langley Williams comes around so much. He scares off all the other men, and he's pretty well making up his mind whether he wants to marry you or—"
The girl suddenly faced her mother, her face white except for the two red spots that came to her cheeks.
"Langley has no idea of marrying me, not I of marrying him," she said as calmly as she could. "Most of the evenings he's here we are working over plans. I prefer it to wasting time talking nonsense to some one."

IN MEMORIAM

DONALD MARTIN

In 1840 William Martin and his family were among a band of emigrants who left Skye, Scotland, for Prince Edward Island. Landing at Charlottetown, they went by boat to Orwell, where friends and relatives had already stayed with their friends till the harvest was done. Then William Martin, with his son Donald, at that time eight years old, went to locate a homestead. He chose a site in what is now Valleyfield, then an unbroken forest. A house was begun and the first and second nights after their day's work father and son returned to stay with friends at Murray Harbor Road, now Grandview. At the end of the third day the house was so that the boy stayed alone in it that night while his father went to bring the rest of the family next day. Thus Donald Martin was the first white man who passed a night in a house in Valleyfield. This was the night of Oct. 31, and on Nov. 1 the family moved into their new home. On the farm then chosen Donald Martin lived a long and useful life, a friend to all, and respected by all, until he passed away on Feb. 14, 1923, in his ninety-first year.

He was possessed of a remarkable memory which remained unimpaired until the very last. He could recall persons and incidents with details, and exact dates without effort, and in a most interesting manner, relate what he saw or heard. His knowledge of the Bible and his hymns common in his earlier days was wonderful.

In 1875 he had a pronounced religious experience, and that year he united in full fellowship with the church, which, from then to the end of his life he upheld with unabating interest. In 1885 he was ordained to the eldership, and this office he adorned by a true Christian life, faithful service and safe counsel.

In 1860 he was married to Mary Martin, Springton, sister of the late Alexander Martin, M.P., Valleyfield. They had nine children. All but three are living and there are twenty-two grandchildren and ten great grandchildren. Mrs. Martin died in 1916. Their son, Malcolm, and his family live on the old homestead and with them the old couple lived in happiness until the journey of each was done, and they passed to the immediate presence of the Redeemer in whom was their trust.

MR. J. D. McLEOD.

The people of Hartsville and vicinity were greatly shocked when on Saturday, March 10, word was passed from one to another that Mr. J. D. McLeod, the merchant, had passed away.
Several weeks before his death the deceased was taken ill with what was believed to be influenza.

To help this fellow grow sturdy in body and active in brain, give him food that builds up his frame even faster than he wears it out in his strenuous play.

LET him have a cup of FRY'S Cocoa often. Here you have a delicious food beverage that is all nourishment. For instance, nearly one fifth of its bulk is "albumen" and albumen is only another form of muscle.

Fat, it has, for warmth and energy, and vitamins to give nerve force. All this because FRY'S is made from the richest and finest cocoa beans, by methods matchless after 200 year's experience. FRY'S is the best and cheapest of all foods for growing boys and girls. Of course, remember

"Nothing will do but FRY'S"

After an illness of three months from the dreaded disease, cancer. Deceased was 59 years old; was born in Charlottetown, P. E. I. Later moved to N. B. He is survived by his wife and four children all of whom were at his bedside: Hubert at home; Harry of Engin; (Mar. Mrs. Curtis Colpitts, Pleasant Vale; Bessie, nurse of Boston; Anne at home and three grand children. He also leaves two brothers and one sister. The brothers are, Alfred of Parkdale, Wesley of Petitoadice; sister, Mrs. Willis U. Prosser, Bathurst.

The funeral took place Wednesday afternoon at Parkdale Church and the remains were laid to rest in the family plot at Parkdale Cemetery. The pall bearers were Alfred Lane, (brother), Hubert and Harry Lane, (sons); Curtis Colpitts, (son-in-law); Edward Prosser and John Carter (nephews of the deceased).

Rev. Wallace F. Forgery, of Assinua University, Wolfville, N. S. former pastor, gave an excellent sermon. The music was very tenderly rendered by the Paragona choir.

There was a fine display of flowers from loving friends and the church was filled to capacity which showed the high esteem and respect in which he was held.

MR. R. L. LANE.

The death of R. L. Lane took place at his late residence, Elgin, N. B., Monday noon, April 9th.

Buy Proven Tire Performance

When you equip your car with Dominion Tires you know that the type of tire you buy has been tried and proven on the type and weight of car you drive.

Dominion Tires are tested on Dominion Tire cars at the expense of the makers, not on your car at your expense.

That extra dependability and super-service which you get in Dominion Tires is the combined result of years of the best manufacturing experience and of thorough testing on a fleet of cars, maintained for that purpose by the Dominion Tire factory.

These cars, all different in type and weight, travel fully loaded, practically every day in the year, in all weathers over every kind of road—75 per cent of them gravel roads. These tests accurately prove what a tire will do or not do. They are a sure guide to correct construction and materials.

This extra assurance of value adds nothing extra to the price.
