CRYSTALS' WINNING STREAK BROKEN LAST NIGHT

They Were Defeated in Senior Game by 5-4. Lost Intermediate Contest by 3-7.

The Crystal hockey team, who have been heretofore undefeated, met their Waterloo last night when they invaded the territory of the Connaught Rangers and were repulsed by the score of 5-4.

The largest crowd of the year, including 100 from Summerside, witnessed the best game of the season played on good ice.

The game started at 8.44 and S. Perry scored for the Crystals in one minute. The play for the next period continued in a very fast and even manner until the Conns' scoring machine got working and then the Conns made three successful marches in one minute each time driving the disc through the Crystals' lines for a goal. It took the Summerside boys six minutes to rally from the effects of the bombardment and make their second score. They took the rubber to the Conns' end in an effort to score again but were stopped by Frank Hennessey, who on securing the puck, made a beautiful run to the Crystals' net where he passed to McCarey for the 4th score for his side. The half ended 4-2 for the Conns.

The second half started at 9.36 and the Crystals at once assumed the aggressive. At 9.47 A. Hennessey lined one at Doucete who stopped beautifully. However Trainer sent in number 5 from the rebound. S. Perry shot the third goal for the Crystals at 9.52. Two minutes later the Crystals' scoring streak stopped as did also the scoring of the game when the Summerside team got their fourth goal. The Crystals tried hard to tie the score but the game ended as Purnell was making a nice run, a victory for the boys of the yellow and black by the score of 5-4.

The teams were the same as have been playing. The officials, Stanaway and Ramsay, were certainly the right men for the job.

There were a number of penalties given. The intermediate game was also won by the Connaughts by the score of 7-3.

"ENGLAND'S MENACE" SUPERB PRODUCTION

Notwithstanding the many other attractions last night, large crowds attended the Prince Edward, where one of the best programmes of the year was produced. The great attraction was the all-British naval and military drama, "England's Menace" produced in three parts. The Prince Edward has put on many excellent patriotic productions but last night's eclipsed them all; and those who witnessed "England's Menace" quite readily saw why the picture "look London by storm." The story follows, but to properly realize the magnificence of the production one has to see it. The ruler of a foreign power is making secret plans to invade England. Of his advisors only the Chancellor protests against the outrageous scheme. His military and naval leaders are eager to obey his commands. One of the chief spies of this foreign power secures a place as butler in the house of Lord Talbot, secretary to the British Prime Minister. He uses his opportunities to copy important papers which Lord Talbot has charge of; papers which refer to the movements of the British ships and soldiers. Lord Talbot's two children have an amateur wireless outfit, which the spy uses to send messages from his government. He burns a sheet of paper on which he decoded a message. The children find the burned fragment which has remained intact, and though they know nothing of the message (the ink of which is still visible on the burned paper) they copy it together with the numbers which represent letters. The date arranged for the invasion arrives. The spy puts off his butler's livery and leaves Lord Talbot's house, going for the last time to the wireless outfit to receive his final message from his government. But the two children are already in the little wireless house, moreover they have taken down the code message, and by use of the key which they made from the charred paper, have succeeded in translating it. Just as they realize the significance of the message—that the foreign fleet is on its way toward the English coast—the spy enters the wireless house. Though the spy tries to balk them, the children get away on their motor cycle and carry the portentous news to their father and the Prime Minister at Downing street. The British government acts with swift decision. The fleets get up steam; the troops begin to march. By a clever use of the enemy's code, the Prime Minister sends out a wireless message which turns back the enemy's ships and transports. The danger is passed. The British Government breathes a sigh of relief, and the English people go placidly about their daily business without realizing how narrowly a dangerous menace has been averted.

The 15th instalment of "The Trey O'Hearts" was shown, concluding one of the most excellent serials played ever put on here. A splendid comedy and an exceptionally good vocal selection by Mr. Huskins concluded the programme.

The above programme will be shown again to-night with the exception of the Ragamuffin, which will be shown at the matinee only.
