'Flying Seven' Offer To Go To France

VANCOUVER, June 14 —(CP)—The "Flying Seven", members of Canada's largest women's flying club, offered today to "go over France and drop bombs on the enemy."

The seven pilots, all Vancouver girls holding flying licences, range in private life from housewife to private secretary. Three of them hold commercial licences.

"We'll go over France and drop bombs on the enemy," said Tosca Trasolini, vice-president of the club, "or we'll stay in Canada and test planes. In fact we'll do anything. But we do want to help Canada and Great Britain win the war."

The women, all with more than 25 flying hours to their credit, have applied in a body to the department of national defence for war work, with the Royal Canadian Air Force if possible.

Nova Scotia Pilot Has Strange Adventure

YARMOUTH, N. S., June 13 —(CP) — The story of how a Canadian pilot with the Royal Air Force, shot down over Holland, was convicted and sentenced to death as a Nazi spy, only to be saved on his way to the firing squad, was told today in a letter received by relatives here.

The letter came from Pilot Officer Jack Hatfield, 27, of nearby Tusket, now listed as "missing.." In it, the young Nova Scotian recounted a series of strange adventures that came to him when he bailed out of his disabled plane over Holland after a dogfight with Nazi airmen.

Before he got home after his brush with the firing squad, Hatfield travelled a night under the wing of a Dutch officer who subsequently turned out to be a genuine spy and was taken off to be shot. The pilot just escaped a second espionage trial.

His story, after describing his early evasion of German parachute troops and his meeting with a fellow British flier near an unidentified Dutch town, goes on:

"We came to a Dutch post, but the trouble had only started.

"They swore we were spies, and we were put under arrest and taken by a guard to a nearby town. We were tried by the commissioner of poice and convicted as spies. They wouldn't even listen to our stories....a lot of Dutch Nazis were being tried at the same time, and the sentence was death by a firing squad.

"We were walked through the streets with the Dutch Nazis. An army general saw us, and he spoke English. He signed for us, and we went to his quarters. He got in touch with his division commander....we were to be taken to the Hague that night by a guard. We left at 9 p. m. accompanied by a Dutch lieutenant and a corporal.. ..the pilot and myself had been lent a Dutch lieutenant's greatcoat each as it was quite cold.

"At about midnight we got stopped and were all taken out of the car with automatics to our heads. I of course thought we had run against a German patrol dressed in Dutch uniforms. Every stick of clothes was taken off us. Papers were found in my Dutch greatcoat.

"The Dutch officer who accompanied us was a Fascist and had papers up his sleeves. My papers (I afterwards found out) were about what dykes the Dutch planned to flood next. They of course were put there by my own guard, who was a spy.

"All through the Dutch army it was the same. So many spies. The Dutch lieutenant stood up for us and said they were his and that we were English and knew nothing about it. It was a very near thing for us. We were almost shot.

"That automatic was at my head and a bayonet at my back for 15 minutes before everything finally straightened out. The Dutch lieutenant was to be shot the next day. I hope he was put in prison ....he seemed very nice but of course deserved death."

Hatfield went on to tell of difficulties in getting out of Holland, with most roads to the sea blocked by Germans. He finally got a drive to The Hook and made the port just 15 minutes before a British destroyer sailed for England.

In describing his squadron's fight with the German planes, Hatfield said the six British planes had tackled seven German dive bombers and 27 Messerschmitt fighters. Three of the fighters sent his plane out of control.

After he had taken to his parachute, one plane gave him a burst of bullets, and he was wounded slightly in one arm. He landed in a river, and had to swim to shore from a small island.

Pilot Officer Hatfield went back into action after his return to England, and he was posted as missing in air operations May 28.
