WELCOME TO OUR SHIP

It is always a pleasure to see steaming into our harbor one of our ships, one of the ships of our British Navy and to realize that she is at home with us in one of the thousand ports of the far flung British Empire. H. M. S. Calcutta, the Flag Ship of the North American and West Indies Station now in our harbor is commanded by Vice-Adm. Sir James A. Ferguson, K. C. M. G., C. B., who with his officers and men are receiving the kindly welcome that always awaits the officers and men of a British warship. The visit this time is regrettably short but the welcome will be all the warmer for that while it lasts. Last night saw the first social function in honor of the visit. Tonight citizens will have the privilege of being entertained at the Prince Edward by the Ship's Concert Company, band and orchestra. That there will be a full house is a foregone conclusion for there are no entertainers afloat or ashore to compare with those of His Majesty's Ships.

We extend to them all, officers and blue jackets, a cordial and brotherly—sisterly also—welcome and many happy returns.

A GOOD MIXER

Commendation is frequently heard of the "good mixer." A "hall fellow, well met," a good story teller, one who can mix freely with all classes and conditions of men and women, acquires a sort of popularity which may carry him far. Yet a man may be such a "mixer" and be useless in any worth while calling; he may be a good mixer and "a hall fellow well met" among boon companions and be an imprudent and even a brutal husband and father.

It is well to be a good mixer within limits, to be able to recognize and to respect the bounds which a man of good breeding and wholesome instincts will not pass but we must never forget that to be a good mixer is only a negative qualification.

The business world is not looking for good mixers, rather it has no place for them. It is looking for business men, for efficient men, for men of brains and judgment, and vision, qualities which are not always associated with good mixers.

The comparison is often heard, and noted in certain newspapers, between Mr. McKenzie King and Mr. Meighen, that the former is a "good mixer" and the latter is not. And the prediction is frequently made by cheap prophets that because Mr. Meighen "walks in the middle of the road," often ignoring, unconsciously no doubt, those on either side who would gladly cultivate a more "hall-fellow" acquaintance with him. This prediction is usually accompanied by the admission, an admission that none will dispute, that Mr. Meighen is the brainiest man in the House of Commons, that as a statesman he stands head and shoulders above Mr. McKenzie King. Indeed the latter has never been accused, even by his supporters except in moments of political ecstasy, of being a statesman but they all agree that he is a "good mixer," a tireless hand shaker and an indefatigable kisser of electors' babies! Mr. Meighen, on the other hand, is not conspicuously addicted to these expedients even during the

Notes By The Way

If our Liberal readers are proud of any thing in the records of Liberalism it seems to be of the Laurier days. Sir Wilfrid was a gifted man, a master of graceful and persuasive speech. He had a gift of leadership that when he formed his cabinet enabled him to surround himself with many talented men of his party. Just here it may occur to some of our Liberal readers that there are strong contrasts between the Liberal leader, the Liberal Government and the Liberal policy of those days and the leader, his colleagues and their policy today?

Sir Wilfrid, a host in himself, had before he came to power, attained a powerful influence in every province of Canada. In his first Cabinet he called about him such men as Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Louis Davies, Hon. Andrew G. Blair, Hon. W. S. Fielding, Sir Henry Joly, and Sir Charles Fitzpatrick all of whom had been Premiers in their respective provinces, making with himself a galaxy of seven Premiers. And this was only the beginning of the bright constellation of which he shone as the central star of the first magnitude. There were others, eminent in political and forensic oratory, or gifted with great ability and skill in debate, or rich in their knowledge and experience in public affairs, their power away from persuasive diction from tongue and pen.

These, outside the seven Premiers included such noted names as Sir William Mulock, since holding a high judicial position in Ontario; Hon. David Mills, acknowledged by both parties as one of the ablest constitutional authorities that Canada has yet produced; Hon. R. W. Scott, author of the famous Canada Temperance Act; Hon. Israel Tarte, an effective speaker in two languages and one of the ablest editorial writers of his time; Sir Richard Cartwright, who had been five years Finance Minister in a previous Liberal Cabinet and renowned as a financial critic and debater; Sir Clifford Sifton, who by his ability, power and wealth swayed a powerful influence in Ontario and the West; and not to go further, Hon. William Paterson, not since excelled in Canada as a political campaigner.

THE JAMMED SPOUT

Every lady has had some experience with what is technically known as the jammed teapot spout. The tea trickles out slowly, she shakes the teapot, and tries again. This falling she runs a knitting needle into the spout but still the tea refuses to flow. Then quite unexpectedly, in the language of the poet:

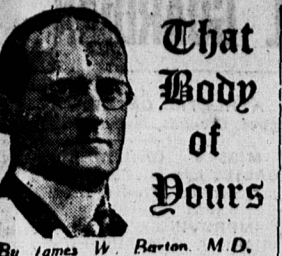

"Down come tea and leaves and cover"

The situation thus created is embarrassing. The linen is soiled, the housewife is annoyed and the visitors snicker.

This is the situation at present in Ottawa. The members are eager to get out of the teapot into the calm shelter of a safe cup. There are only a few cups, a couple of vacant senatorships and a few prospective vacant ones; a governorship, two or three judgeships, the vacant chairmanship of the Railway Board, an Ambassadorship to Washington and a few Royal Commissionerships which might under extreme necessity be created. But the spout is not large enough to accommodate them all at once and they are all trying to get-out at once. The spout is jammed. There are many applicants for each job; we could have ten governors tomorrow in Prince Edward Island; there are a dozen applicants for the two vacant senatorships and another dozen or so waiting for senatorial funerals, and so on through all the offices and prospective offices. But there is nothing doing; no appointments are being made nor can be made as the spout is jammed with men climbing over each other to get out. The "uncrowned" housewife is frantically shaking the teapot but there is no go. There will be a few dribbles through the jammed spout into a few select cups but at the general election "leaves and tea and cover" will come down together, and flow over the table. When never to be gathered to these expedients even during the Today we see King's only really strong men—Fielding, Gouin, Mitchell and others down and out, their convictions, their judgment and their policy flouted, the death knell of protection sounded, the tariff walls thrown down, the Canadian home market thrown open to whoever may choose to exploit it, thousands of Canadian workers unemployed or driven in to exile. What a contrast to the boasted prosperity of the Laurier days! What a falling off in men in measure and in the welfare and prosperity of the country since the Lilliputians of today have seized the seats once held by men of stature.

We feel assured that intelligent

THE REAL CAUSE

A young physician asked a nerve specialist just how a certain case should be handled.

"The patient is depressed all the time. He gets very little sleep, is awake for hours at a time.

During the day his thoughts are apparently miles away from his work, and only by concentration for a few minutes at a time, is he able to hold his position at all.

He is very careful and cautious about his food, picking and choosing with the utmost concern, because he believes certain foods are injurious.

He is gradually losing weight and I'm in a quandary.

I've been all over him, have an X-Ray taken of his teeth, have given him an X-Ray meal, have given him test meals, and can find no organic trouble whatever."

"What did you finally tell him?"

"I told him that there was nothing wrong, and just as soon as he forgot that he was sick he'd be all right."

"Well you'll not be able to help him now, because if he believes he is sick, he is just as sick as if he were really sick."

The subsequent history of that patient is interesting.

He went to another physician who took a very keen interest in him, because he realized that he was reaching a point where further discouragement might be serious.

Accordingly, he spent considerable time hearing all the various symptoms as they were outlined in great detail by the patient.

He suggested some simple treatment and requested the patient to return in a week.

He then spent about an hour hearing all about the symptoms again.

Further simple treatment was outlined, and the patient requested to return in a week.

The physician then said "I find you have some nervous disturbance, and also some symptoms indicating a disturbance in digestion, and of the heart and circulation. After careful examination I find that your nervous ailment is causing the digestive and heart disturbance, so you'd better tell what is preying upon your mind so deeply.

The patient broke right down, and told a story that was really a confession.

The physician was able to explain away this difficulty, and the other symptoms disappeared with it.

Best as a grief stricken husband—what at the time was so ill that it felt that it would not be wise make him acquainted with the fact of his wife's death. She lay to mourn the loss of a kind and loving mother, four young children, namely Margaret, Katharine, Helen and a baby brother on four months old.

Mrs. McKinnon was daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Coles, Milton. She was one of a family of three brothers and sisters. The brothers are in Stoughton, Mass., and James an Ambassador at home and the other sister besides Mrs. McKinnon is Mrs. P. H. Warren, Bay View. All will feel the loss of their dear sister.

At the contrasts between these days and the Laurier days, and that many of them are convinced that the King Government is weak in men, misguided in judgment and has now entered upon a perilous downward course for which there is and can be no remedy but their dismissal from office and power. This is a question of vital interest far above any considerations of party victory or defeat. It must be met in the same patriotic spirit with which Canadians entered the war, all hearts resolved to rescue the country from the imminent

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. STEWART MCKINNON

On Wednesday, July 23rd, Mrs. Stewart McKinnon a very highly esteemed resident of Highfield passed peacefully away at the age of twenty-nine years.

The deceased had been ill only a few days and the news of her death came as a great shock to her family.

She was born in Scotland, less than two weeks before Mrs. McKinnon's death her husband had been stricken down with typhoid fever and had been taken to the Prince Edward Island Hospital for convalescence.

Not many days after this Mrs. McKinnon was afflicted with typhoid and she was removed to the P. E. Island Hospital.

Happenings of the Week

Now that Princess Mary and her new son are continuing to make satisfactory progress, the interest of the nation is centred on what name the King's second grandson is going to bear. The Earl of Harwood the baby's paternal grandfather, threw some light on that point when he declared: "He will almost certainly bear the Christian name of his godfather, who so far as arrangements have been at present, will be the Prince of Wales."

The Earl added that as he was the godfather of the first child, he will not be the second, and the King and Queen are not expected to attend the christening. According to present plans, this will take place in about two months at Goldsborough, after church services, and the Duchess of York will be asked to be godmother. As the Prince of Wales's names are Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David, the boy's parents will have a great variety from which to choose. After the christening, Princess Mary probably will take the child on his first visit to the King and Queen at Balmoral. The boy already has lustrous lungs, and resembles the Queen.

A cordial welcome is extended to the officers and men of H. M. S. Calcutta under command of Vice-Admiral Sir James A. Ferguson, K. C. M. G., C. B., R. N. now in port.

The round of gaieties always anticipated when one of His Majesty's ships arrive in port was auspiciously started last night with the dance at old Government House under the auspices of the Navy League. It was a most delightful affair and attended by the youth and beauty of the city, augmented by many visitors holidaying at the hotels and beaches. The music was particularly good, the floor excellent, and the dainty supper exquisitely served. The chaperones were Mrs. J. D. Stewart, Mrs. J. O. Hyndman, Mrs. F. R. Hartz, Mrs. S. R. Jenkins and Mrs. McCready.

His Honor the Lieutenant Governor will entertain at luncheon at 1.15 tomorrow in honor of the Vice-Admiral Sir James A. Ferguson and officers of H. M. S. Calcutta, and a few prominent citizens.
