Co-op Organizations By Canadian Farmers

There are almost 400,000 members of co-operative farmers' co-operative organizations in Canada. In 1938-39, the total business of these organizations was over 200 million dollars according to information compiled by the Economics Division, Marketing Services, Dominion Department of Agriculture. Farmer co-operatives thus occupy a very important part in Canadian business.

But not only are there a great many co-operatives there are a great many different kinds. Some people are aware of the marketing co-operatives in fruits and vegetables, livestock, wheat and dairy products, but other associations exist across the country and which may not be so well known.

For instance, in British Columbia at Gibson's Landing is the Howe Sound Co-operative Canning Association. This organization manufactures jam from small fruits such as strawberries, raspberries, blueberries, and plums. In some years this little group of about 100 farmer-manufacturers 85,000 pounds of jam.

The Maritime Provinces are well advanced in co-operative activity. Farmer-fishermen along the south shore of Guysboro, Cape Breton, Scotia own a canning factory. During the lobster season, the plant is used to can sea-food and in other seasons to can small fruits. Tor Bay canned blueberries are a product of this co-operative.

Farmer's Co-operatives are branching into new types of organization and should prove as successful there as they have been in marketing and purchasing activities.

At Barrie in Ontario, farmers own and operate a co-operative packing plant. This group, organized in 1929, now has over 1,200 shareholders and in some years has packed and marketed a million dollars worth of livestock and poultry products.

At last - women's earnings that really are useful. Mayor S. W. Humphrey of Lowestoft, figured women might lose the ear-plugs being contributed to deaden the noise of bomb explosions so had them made into earrings. When not in use as a noise-stopper, the plugs dangle at the end of a chain.

A North London housewife found a good way to take her baby to the air raid shelter. She wheeled the infant there on a tea-wagon and then used it as a bunk.
