It is noticed that New Wonderland has adopted a new title, or rather an additional one, and an appropriate one as well. The "People's Theatre" is admirably adapted to a house wherein the mass of the people are entertained, wherein the classes can be amused at a reasonable price, and where the shows are always moral and clean. The pictures last night were good in every respect; they were steady and clear; the subjects were well chosen from the standpoint of instructiveness and entertainment, and one of the pleasantest evenings spent there for a long while was last evening. It is safe to predict for New Wonderland, the "People's Theatre" long continued success, and it is certainly going along the lines to assure it.
