MARRIAGE BY PROXY

QUESTION IN ENGLAND LONDON, Oct. 21.—The question should marriage by proxy be legalized in Great Britain for the special benefit of men at the front, now is being discussed at great length in the newspapers. France has already made this wartime concession, and the Australian Government has called a conference of churchmen and others to consider the adoption of a proxy form of marriage between Australians at the front and women in Australia.

While soldiers from England generally have a chance of returning on leave for the purpose of marriage, there are frequently difficulties in the way and marriage by proxy would probably be frequently employed if the laws permitted, especially in the case of a man severely wounded or stricken with serious illness at the front.
