THE WOMAN HE MARRIED

BY JANE PHELPS

A DIFFICULT TIME

Chapter 74

That very afternoon Dick put the lot into the hands of the agent of whom he had bought it.

"I must get rid of it at once even if I get back less than I have put in it. I can pay no more interest.' Of course we had to pay interest until the lot was all paid for.

"I'll do my best," the agent had replied, "but real-estate is slow just now." When Dick told me I felt like saying, "Isn't everything in the world against us?" but I would not discourage him by a word. Encouragement was needed now.

I wrote Mother and asked her to let me have all she could. It wouldn't be much, but perhaps enough to help a little. I told her everything—just how hard a wife I had been from the very beginning, how I had squandered Dick's money for clothes, had run him in debt, and everything.

She sent us $400—all she had.

With the money came a letter such as only a loving mother could write. Not one word of blame,not a single word—just loving advice for the future, and belief in both of us. When I showed the letter to Dick he cried like a baby. Then I wept too. Someway those tears over Mother's letter drew us still closer together.

I paid Mrs. Gray at once, then gave the other $100 to the tradesmen.Now we would be paying for all we had for the house—and having as little as possible.

I went to the furniture people. This was the only thing I did without consulting Dick. I told them we couldn't pay the balance on our furniture for a long time, perhaps never, I asked them to take it back, taking also some of the paid-for pieces to reimburse them for the use of the other.

The manager of the store was awfully nice.

"If all people whom we trust came to us as honestly, Mrs. Williams, we would have less trouble." He agreed to do as I asked after consulting with another man.

Dick fairly beamed when I told him what had done.

"You are a great little financier, Nan!" he said. "The furniture account looked pretty big."

But he was not to be allowed to feel happy over anything very long. The very next day he lost his position. He told me about it in a hopeless sort of a way that was worse than if he had been angry and stormed.

Ogden said they had heard I speculated, and as it was necessary to reduce expenses because of the conditions in the country, loss of trade,et cetera, he thought best to let me go instead of one of the others.

"Had you not speculated,knowing it was against the rules, we would have kept you on,' Dick told me Mr. Ogden had said, "but we have positive proof that you have.'

"It's Burns' work," Dick said with conviction

I almost gave up under this calamity. For that was what it was. His salary would have kept us and allowed us, by the most stringest economy, to pay a little each month on our debts. But no salary! Perhaps it would be months before Dick could find anything to do. There was a good deal of unemployment, many men waiting for every position.

But I wouldn't let Dick see how terribly discouraged and frightened I was. I had seen Felice, and she had been awfully angry, had accused me of dishonesty, et cetera. But I would not let her frighten me.

"We haven't a penny." She had threatened to sue me. "You will only waste your money if you do," I told her. "One can't pay what they haven't. Some day if I live I will pay you.'

I think she saw I was trying to be honest with her, and although very nasty, very threatening, she never did sue me. It had been a hard, trying interview, and it was when I reached home from that, that Dick told me of the loss of his position.

"I told her the truth, didn't I?' I asked Dick after I had repeated what Felice had said. "We haven't a penny, have we?"

"Not half a one!" Then, "You're a brick, Nan! Maybe I don't know how hard it must be for you to do these things. I told that grasping tailor of mine he same thing. But until I told him I had lost my position he insisted he would sue. That put a quietus on him. I shall pay him, every cent we owe—if I live long enough."

"Of course you will! Here's a letter from Mother. Let's see what she says?" I wanted to cheer him up, yet I felt so discouraged myself I didn't know what to do. The rest was bad enough, but the loss of his position was worst of all,

"It's Burns' work," he had said. "I am convinced of it, although I probably would have a hard time proving it. I wonder why he turned against me so suddenly,' he finished musingly.

GROCERS TAKING LESS PROFIT ON MANY LINES

Red Rose Tea People Make a Further Statement

Some of our friends among the grocers, in speaking of our letter to the press on grocers' profits, have indicated that apparently it has been consrued by some readers to mean that Red Rose Tea was the only article on which the grocer takes a smaller profit, in order to give his customers a righer quality.

It was not our intention to convey such an impression, as we know that most grocers sell well known brands of other goods at less profit than they could make on some brands equally well known, and for the same reason that they recommend Red Rose Tea, simply to give their customers the best possible value.

In our letter we mentioned Red Rose Tea because it naturaly came first to our mind and because we knew that grocers were selling it at a less profit than they make on other teas.—T. H. Estabrooks Co., Limited, St. John, N. B.

FRONT SPARK-PLUGS BREAK REPEATEDLY

J. D. M. writes: The porcelains of the spark-plugs in the two front cylinders of my engine are constantly breaking. They just seem to blow up, although the plugs are screwed in only tight enough to keep them from leaking. Can you assign a cause for this?

ANSWER: If the plugs used in the front and in the rear cylinders are exactly alike, we cannot tell you why the front ones break and the rear ones do not. If the front plugs are of a different make or type from the rear ones, this might easily account for your trouble. Are you using plugs recommended for this particular engine? Breakage results from the use of inferior porcelain, from the employment of plugs that project too far into the cylinder and in the case of plugs that can be taken apart, from injudicious tightening of the packing nut or failure to use proper gaskets between the porcelain and the metal parts.

HAND THROTTLE OR ACCELERATOR

P. C. K. asks: Is better fuel economy obtained by driving with the hand throttle or the accelerator? Is the effect upon the engine any different.

ANSWER: Skillfully used, one will give as good economy as the other. However, if the operator is unskillful, the engine is usually allowed to race more, when the hand throttle is used and racing wastes gas as well as being very hard on the engine. On the other hand if the operator is inconsiderate and drives with the accelerator, he is likely to "step on" it frequently, thus throwing the throttle wide open, wasting considerable gas beside straining the engine severely. There is less likelihood of sudden full openings of the throttle, when the hand lever is used. While the hand lever and the pedal perform exactly the same function, the balance of advantages is strongly in favor of the habitual use of the latter, although there may not be much difference in the particular matter of fuel economy.

GENERATOR OVERCHARGES BATTERY

C. F. H. v. B. writes: The starter-generator on my car over charges the battery at the rate of 25 amperes at all ordinary speeds and I hesitate to take long trips for fear of destroying the battery. The manufacturers state that the only way in which this charging rate can be reduced is to disassemble the starter-generator and grind away the pole-pieces to increase the air-gap, which will be an expensive and delicate job. Can you suggest any alternative?

ANSWER: This is a motor-generator, with a series (bucking) field to hold down the charging current and no other means of regulation. They evidently did not put on enough series turns to keep the current down. We offer the following alternative suggestions: Put a small resistance unit in series with the shunt field current to reduce this somewhat. Introduce a small resistance coil in the wire from the cut-out to the battery, to slightly reduce the charging voltage. Make an artificial lamp load out of resistance wire and connect it, through a special switch, to the lamp circuit, so that it will take nearly the amperage of the lamps, when you are driving without the regular lamps in circuit. This will consume current that would otherwise go into the battery.

Stanley Veno Is At Chatham Home

FREDEICTON, N. B., Jan. 31.—Stanley (Shorty) Veno, whom Montreal despatches last night and today report to have "mysteriously disappeared" from that city last Tuesday, is at his home at Chatham.

There cannot have been much "mystery" as to Veno's whereabouts since last Tuesday, as on Wednesday night he played for Chatham against Fredericton and his presence in the game started protests and counter protests which A. A. U. of C. officials as well as the officers of the New Brunswick Hockey League now have before them.

St. Mary's College Loses Beloved Brother

OAKLAND, Jan. 8.—Flapping limp and fitfully in a drizzling rain, the flag hung at half mast on the campus of St. Mary's College Wednesday morning. Incoming students queried and surmised. And then came to many of them a sense of personal loss and the pathos of parting. For Brother Justin had died during the night.

Brother Justin was head of the department of biology at St. Mary's and, though he was not in the habit of making sensational statements about his experiments to the public press, he was known and respected by many of the leading biilogists of the country. What is of more importance, he was loved and revered by his colleagues and his pupils.

Born in Canada, Sept. 23, 1868, Brother Justin came to California in 1884 and shortly afterwards he entered the Christian Brothers' novitiate at Martinez where Thomas Francis Hughes became Brother Utho Justin. He was destined to spend many happy years at Martinez; for, after the completion of his studies, he was appointed to a place on the teaching staff of the Junior Novitiate.

Though he taught in several schools before reaching his goal at St. Mary's, Brother Justin will be best remembered in Santa Cruz. He was associated during many years with the Holy Cross School, first as assistant, then as principal. He was everybody's friend. He maintained cordial relations with persons of all denominations and effected a helpful correlation of his school with other institutions. And many a shambling youth he fired with a desire to serve God and love books and live richly.

The monk lavishly praised and warmly welcomed by the outside world is not always such a prime favorite among his holy brethren in the cloister; but Brother Justin was even a greater favorite at home than he was abroad. Though for years a semi-invalid, he was attentive to his religious duties and was characterized by that most desirable of traits, a vivid and unabstrusive piety.

As to Brother Justin's devotion to his favorite subject of biology, any St. Mary's man—even any student in the high school—can testify to the range of his knowledge, the skill of his teaching and the inspiring quality of his intercourse.

Intent on his work in his newly-equipped laboratory, Brother Justin put in a full class day Tuesday. Late in the afternoon he complained of feeling unwell. He suffered severe pains during the evening until death came to his release. He was attended in his last moments by Father J. J. Cranwell, the veteran chaplain of St. Mary's College.

On Thursday the funeral took place. A Solemn Requiem Mass was chanted in the college chapel, the student choir rendered appropriate selections and the Brothers, his colleagues in the Lord, acted as a guard of honor about his remains. Then the cortege glided out to St. Mary's Cemetery, the Brothers sang the Benedictus and dust was consigned unto dust. Above the hillside plot where the departed Brothers repose in peace looms a gray marble stone and on it are inscribed the inspired and inspiring words: "They that instruct others unto justice shall shine as stars for all eternity." Beneath that standard Brother Justin sleeps.

Brother Justin was a native of Prince Edward Island and a son of the late Patrick Hughes of Hunter River.

OIL LIGHT BEATS ELECTRIC OR GAS

Burns 94 p. c. Air

A new oil lamp that gives an amazingly brilliant, soft, white light, even better than gas or electricity, has been tested by the U. S. Government and 35 leading universities and found to be superior to 10 ordinary oil lamps. It burns without odor, smoke or noise—no pumping up, is simple, clean, safe. Burns 94 per cent. air and 6 per cent. common kerosene (coal-oil).

The inventor, G. A. Johnson, 246 Craig St., West, Montreal, is offering to send a lamp on 10 days FREE trial, or even to give one FREE to the first user in each locality who will help him introduce it. Write him to-day for full particulars. Also ask him to explain how you can get the agency and without experience or money make $250 to $500 per month.—Adv.
