BRITISH NAVY AND HYDROGRAPHY WORK

Correspondent Writes of Good That is Being Done-To Make Seas Safe-No Other Country Has Department That is Conducted on So Large a Scale

LONDON, July 19.—The annual report of the hydrographer of the British navy for 1910, which has just been issued, called to mind the good work which is being continually carried on by this department of the admiralty in the interests of the safe navigation of the ocean highways of the world. In no other country is there a hydrographic department on so large a scale as that of Great Britain. All maritime powers, of course, must have some organization for marine surveying and for the proper charting of their coasts and harbors if these are to be navigated in safety, but it is very seldom that such work is carried on except in waters strictly adjacent to the important seaports.

The operations of the British surveying service, on the other hand, are world-wide, and the 1910 report shows that, in addition to the five vessels employed in the home waters survey, the Egeria was surveying in British Columbia, the Fantome in Australian waters, the Merlin off the coast of Borneo, the Mutine on the west, south and southwest coasts of Africa, the Sealark and Waterwitch in the Straits Settlements and Solomon Islands and the Elinor in Newfoundland waters. Altogether 867 miles of coastline was charted and an area of no less than 14,425 square miles sounded over during last year. Of the work of the surveying branch in general not much is known outside the ranks of those engaged in it, so unostentatious is it carried on. Under ordinary conditions it might be said that the better the work is done the less heard about it. But in the sea profession it is the extraordinary things that have frequently to be reckoned with, and however efficient the surveying service may be, its work cannot entirely prevent mishaps occurring to ships by stranding through the charts by which they were being navigated being defective or not up to date. The survey of the seas, in fact, is never completed. Banks shift and grow, the coral insect is at work and new routes which shorten distances and cut corners are followed. Then, in addition to the constant changes of the sea bottom, every year ships are built of deeper draught and greater length than those which preceded them, and which required less water to move about in. An illustration of this was afforded during the home fleet's visit to Ferrol in February last, when three ships of the Dreadnought class, drawing twenty-seven feet of water, grazed a rock in entering the harbor and slightly damaged their bottoms. It turned out that Ferrol harbor had not been surveyed by the Spanish government since 1893, and the existing charts were made when any rocks more than twenty-eight feet below low water mark were disregarded. The obstruction upon which the British vessels went aground was indicated upon them at all, being from thirty to thirty-two feet below low water mark.

There is one paragraph in the annual reports of the Hydrographer of the navy that must have particular interest for seamen—that in which is recorded the recently discovered perils. In 1910 as many as 373 rocks and shoals dangerous to navigation were reported and in the previous year no less than 497. The significance of these figures is not lessened by the explanatory note that in 1909 there were 16 and in the previous year 14 rocks and shoals discovered by vessels striking on them. Turning to the actual surveying work carried out in 1910, it is evident that the £70,000 voted for the purpose was money well spent, not only from the naval point of view, but from that of the merchant service as well. Of the ships employed in home waters, the Triton was mainly occupied in surveying the Thames estuary, and it will interest seamen making the port of London to know that in one part, between Shingles Patch and the Long Sands, considerable shoaling was found to have taken place, the least depth obtained being four feet, as against nine feet in 1904 and thirty feet in 1882. A new channel is now being cut to the southward of the Shingles Patch. As to the publications of the department, it is worthy of note that the number of charts printed during the last three years is no less than 1,431,752. More than half a million charts were produced in 1910 alone. It has been natural, of course, for all interested in recent political action to turn to the charts and hydrographic notes in connection with the port of Agadir. There is on the chart published by the British Hydrographer a plan of this place supplied by the French government, from which it is evident that although there is deep water in the roadstead and protection from northeasterly winds, the port is entirely open to the west to the gales that blow from the Atlantic in the winter, which must set up a considerable surf on the beach and probably oblige all the larger vessels to put to sea. The roadstead of Agadir, indeed, does not appear to possess any of the elements which would facilitate its use as a permanent coaling station or base for the use of men of war. It is true that a breakwater might be constructed to enclose a portion of the harbor, but it

SCHOOL SALUTED BRITISH FLAG

NEW YORK, July 19.—Principal Stewart H. Rowe of the Wadleigh High School, instead of enjoying the beauties of nature as a hard working school teacher is supposed to do on vacation, is obliged to have his pen in hand and explain why he required the Wadleigh girls to arise on the day of King George V's coronation, salute the British flag and say:

"I salute the British flag and hope there will be an arbitration treaty between England and America."

Perhaps Prof. Rowe didn't put it just that way, but these are the words mentioned by the United Irish-American Societies in their complaint against Mr. Rowe to the board of education. Their letter, which has been sent on to Prof. Rowe with a request to explain, is as follows:

The board of directors of the United Irish-American Societies herewith call to your attention a violation of the State law and of the city school law by Mr. Stewart H. Rowe, principal of Wadleigh High school and respectfully ask an investigation and such action as the facts may warrant.

Complaints of coercion have been made to this board by pupils of Wadleigh High school and by parents. These complaints, if made personally or in writing by the complaining pupils or their guardians would cause such pupils to be prosecuted and punished by class teacher and principal.

It is charged that Principal Rowe has violated section 81 of Article VII of the Consolidated Laws of the State of New York, which provides: "It shall not be lawful to display the flag or emblem of any foreign country upon any State, county or municipality building." That on or about "coronation day," June 22, 1911, Mr. Rowe displayed on Wadleigh High school public building, that to say upon the wall of the building in class rooms, the British flag.

That Principal Rowe read or caused to be read to the pupils a political document in the form of a letter which Leonard Halloran, headmaster of a school in Hanworth, England, had been advised to send to City Superintendent Maxwell, with political document Mr. Maxwell sent to the principals of high schools for action.

That Principal Rowe caused the pupils to rise and salute the British flag and to repeat the formula: "I salute the British flag and hope there will be an arbitration treaty between England and America."

That Principal Rowe knew the Anglo-American treaty is a political scheme of certain leaders of the Republican party and that the compulsory salutation and prayer were distasteful to the pupils of German, Italian, Slavic and Irish birth and descent and to their guardians and was an unwarranted violation of the law which bars politics as well as religion from the public school.

That the political activity of Principal Rowe is detrimental to school discipline and is an outrage upon the feelings and convictions of the pupils and their guardians.

The communication is signed James Clancy, chairman, and John Sheehy, secretary.

the letter from Head Master Challenor which he sent to the principals of the various schools was in no way a "political document."

Supt. Maxwell explained that it had become the custom for schools in all parts of the world to exchange letters, the idea being to provide an interesting method of widening the pupils' knowledge of other lands. Head Master Challenor's letter, he said, was a "beautiful tribute to America;" it was a letter to arouse the patriotism of the school children here and had "nothing whatever political in it."

Supt. Maxwell said that he sent the letter or a copy of it to Principal Rowe among others, but did not know what action if any Principal Rowe took. He was certain that the letter was in every way a proper one to be read to the pupils.

None of the members of the board of education seen yesterday would venture an opinion as to what would happen to Principal Rowe in case he writes that he did display the British flag and that the high school girls saluted and expressed a respect for an arbitration treaty. That, it was said, will be a matter for the whole board to decide.

A MILLION SOULS FOR CHRIST.

On the eastern coast of Asia lies one of the most fascinating countries of the far East. To the north is Manchuria, to the east Japan, to the south and west the vast tracts of China, in the centre are the 80,000 square miles that comprise the country of Korea.

Twenty-five years ago a wonderful change occurred in this country. God seemed to call this wonderful land into the forefront of the world's activity as if moved by an invisible hand. The doors of the hitherto hermit country swung open and Christian missionaries entered with the word of life. During the past quarter of a century there has taken place in Korea, the most sudden turning of a nation to God that has been witnessed in the world's history.

The population of Korea is thirteen millions. During the twenty-five years' labor by the missionary forces, which now number about three hundred, about one hundred thousand converts have been brought out of heathenism; while the total number of adherents of the Christian Church reaches two hundred thousand.

The most notable feature in the progress of the Korean Church is the supreme faith and apostolic fervor of believers. Their zeal in soul-winning is an inspiration to the entire Christian world. Their trust in God is of the kind that moves mountains.

It was during years 1903 to 1907 that Korea was visited with a gracious out-pouring of the Holy Spirit and a consequent revival which thrilled the Christian world. The missionaries were seized with a passion for prayer. They spent a week on the mountain side with a number of Koreans, pleading day and night for a mighty out-pouring of God's spirit. At the conclusion of the prayer conference, Mr. Stokes went on an itinerating tour, with his heart on fire for souls. About this time there was born in the heart of Dr. Reid, a great desire that the whole missionary band might unite in a common watchword for the ensuing year, which would act as a stimulus for the Korean Church. At a meeting of the General Council on the 9th day of October, Dr. Reid arose and moved the adoption of the watchword "A million souls for Jesus." Mr. Harkness, the pianist and composer of the Chapman-Alexander party, caught the enthusiasm of the missionaries for the million souls campaign, so fully that he wrote the words and music of a special hymn entitled, "A Million Souls for Jesus." It was at once translated into Korean, and is being sung in churches and homes throughout the country. A call for prayer was then sent out from Seoul to the various mission stations, and Korean and missionaries united day and night in prayer for a mighty out-pouring of the Holy Spirit.

Today Korea is honeycombed with prayer circles, and noonday prayer meetings are being held daily in many of the mission stations.

Korean Christians pray with a fervor and faith that should put believers in western lands to shame. They think little of spending all day or all night in prayer. Sometimes they will kneel for hours on the frozen ground, agonizing with God for the out-pouring of His spirit, and for the salvation of the lost.

The second great agency in the crusade for souls is, the word of God. The entire Christian Church is being urged to carry God's word with them wherever they go, to read it daily, and to give portions to the unsaved in order to win them to Christ.

The most striking methods of personal work in Korea, is the custom of setting apart whole days and weeks of time to be devoted exclusively to personal dealing with the unsaved.

The effort to win a million souls to Christ in a year has already resulted in a marvellous quickening of the Church in a great ingathering of souls. Will not every reader unite with the missionaries in prayer that a million of the people may become believers in one year.

We lately, in Murray Harbor, had a visit from Rev. Mr. Robb and wife. returned missionaries from Korea, and think their visit here should be fraught with much good in stirring up in the people a fresh zeal for missions.

Following is the Hymn A Million Souls for Jesus:

NEW FRENCH PREMIER.

PARIS, July 19.—France is intensely interested in the personality and career of her new Prime Minister, Joseph Caillaux, for among other things he is considered with ambitions to the Presidency when the present term of Fallieres expires. M. Caillaux has great wealth. He is the son of a distinguished father, Eugene Caillaux, who had a prominent place in politics after the Franco-Prussian War and was, like his son, Minister of Finance.

Only Caillaux becomes Premier at 46. He is the personification of tireless activity and work. In appearance he is clear-eyed and aggressive. There is a French saying that the great orators of the country seem almost always to come from the South. Caillaux is neither of the North or South, but like Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, was born in the Sarthe Department in the West Central District.

He is not an impassioned orator like the brilliant Briand, but he makes a strong, business-like speech. Sometimes in the heat of interested discussion he becomes passionate, condemnatory, but invariably returns to the calm business man's standpoint.

The Premier is a shrewd financier by heredity, training and experience. He is a radical who believes in a broad, radical program of progress. He is, for instance, the artisan of the income tax project which has been passed by the Chamber of Deputies, but which is now held up in the Senate. He believes in pensions for the workmen and intends that this measure adopted by Parliament shall be put into operation soon.

In a few words, the new Premier might be summed up as a financier, statesman and as a millionaire radical working for social reform.

TEN DAYS LIMIT FOR MOTHER-IN-LAW'S VISIT

NEW YORK, July 19.—Ten days is the limit in Brooklyn for a mother-in-law's visit, Magistrate McGuire said today.

Ten days ago Mrs. May Coyle of Boston came to Brooklyn to visit her daughter-in-law, May. Yesterday the young May served the elder May with a summons to appear in court on a charge of disturbing her domestic happiness. Harry Coyle, the son and husband, sat through the proceedings with never a word.

"She took charge of everything," said the younger Mrs. Coyle. "I didn't know how to cook; I don't know how to wash the baby. For every rule I had she had a better one and finally she turned my husband against me."

"Ten days is long enough for any mother-in-law to hold possession," ruled the magistrate. "I advise you to take the first train home," he said to Mrs. Coyle senior. She did.

"Clean your hat with Strobin. If your straw hat is getting faded or soiled you have only to apply Strobin to make it look like new. Strobin is easy to use and efficient in results. You can't afford to do without it. Price, 15c a bottle at The Two Macs.

Just One Corn

Chorus: "A million souls for Jesus!" Lord, grant our hearts desire! "A million souls for Jesus!" Lord, spread the Gospel fire.

"A million souls for Jesus!" In this dark world of sin; "A million souls for Jesus!" Lord, now the work begin! Make us Thy servants willing Thy blessed will to do; Give us Thy Holy Spirit, fill us with power anew.
