ASHES of ROSES

A Romance of Today
 By Joanna Cannan

"Good," said Geoffrey, rather absently. He was wondering exactly what happened at a firm's outing, and whether it would be possible for him to see anything of Fay.

That same question occupied his mind throughout the days that followed. In consequence, he drove his father's two-seater into the back of a sedate Rolls-Royce on Maldenhead Bridge, placed RO before RE in his card index, displeased his landlady by going to bed and leaving the windows of his sitting room open and the electric light ashine. On Tuesday he summoned up courage enough to ask Miss Evers if she was going, and on Wednesday to ask her if Miss Bennett was going too. Connie Evers told him, yes, and Mr. Errans being for the moment out of the office, she even called across to Fay, "Mr. Geoffrey wants to know if you're going on Thursday, dear!" A muffled sound came from behind the file cabinets and Fay's typewriter clicked rapidly on. Miss Carter said, "Sh, sh." Geoffrey felt himself blushing. He conducted an imaginary search in a drawer.

On Wednesday evening it began to rain, no downpour but a steady, hopeless drizzle without a break in the clouds. Unable to support an evening of anxious solitude in his sitting-room, Geoffrey betook himself to a Cinema. The film, a romantic one, and the dreamy music which was played with it, woke in his youthful heart an intolerable ache for such scenes and such kisses for himself and Fay. He walked back to his lodgings in the total oblivion of a blissful daydream. Only as he fumbled for his latchkey, did he notice that it was still raining.

In office and factory, Gilmour and Legate Limited employed three hundred persons, and two hundred and eighty six of these had expressed the intention of taking part in the annual outing. But it is doubtful if any of them hoped and feared more of the weather than did John Gilmour's son.

CHAPTER IV.

THE OUTING

The weather cleared. Blue over the housetops stretched the Pacific heavens, gold into the dazzling heights of them uprose the glorious sun. Geoffrey woke at dawn, saw that it was fine, turned over and fell to his first sound slumber of that night. But, nevertheless, he was early on the road, for you never know what might happen and he wasn't going to take any risks of arriving at Derham-on-Sea after the char-a-bancs.

The consequence was that he arrived far too early. He parked his car in the square where he was told that the char-a-bancs would set down their passengers, and walked down to the sea, which seemed to reflect the mood of his own heart, so gaily it danced in the pathway of the morning sun. He did not dare to stay there long, however, but soon returned to the car park to wait.

About an hour later the first char-a-banc arrived. It was full of the factory hands, and two more came before Geoffrey caught sight of a face he knew. This was Miss Carter's. He was going up to her when he saw Fay, Connie Evers and Mr. Turner coming towards him across the road. Fay was wearing blue, a full, flowered frock, a big hat, and a string of crystal beads. Her frock had not been expensive and it had lost its first freshness, but it was of the type which best suited her; she was even more the Dresden china shepherdess now. Miss Evers wore a black and scarlet frock and a smart little scarlet hat. Mr. Turner wore white flannel trousers, a navy blue blazer with brass buttons, and the collar of his white cricket shirt outside his coat. "It's never you, Mr. Geoffrey!" cried Miss Evers. "Why, how early you must have got down! We were looking out for you all the way along."

"A sports car passed us in Regate," said Mr. Turner. "Miss Evers thought it might be you, but Miss Bennett said it wasn't the back of your head at all."

Geoffrey looked at Fay: who studied her handbag. "No it wasn't me," he said. "I must have started before you did. That's my car over there."

"Very nice," admired Miss Evers. "You can knock quite a lot out of her," said Mr. Turner. "dare say."

"Oh, she isn't at all speedy," said Geoffrey. "Just an ordinary, useful sort. What are you going to do now?"

"We thought we'd just take a stroll along the prom before dinner," explained Miss Evers. "And Mr. Turner was going to find out about the bathing arrangements. Then we won't waste any time this afternoon. Come along, girls and boys!"

They went down the street and along the promenade. Geoffrey asked Fay if she had ever been to Derham-on-Sea before. She said No, and that this year she had been to Bournemouth with Miss Evers. By means of walking slowly and asking questions about Bournemouth, Geoffrey contrived that he and she should drop behind.

So when Connie Evers and Mr. Turner turned down to the beach to ask about the bathing, it was quite natural to say, "Let's wait for them here." And there was a bench on which Fay sat down, while Geoffrey leaned against the rails of the promenade and watched her with such admiration in his eyes that her own glance wavered when she looked at him.

"Are you going to bathe this afternoon, Miss Bennett?" Geoffrey asked.

"I expect so, Miss Evers is awfully keen. She swims beautifully, and I believe Mr. Turner is a good swimmer, too. I'm only learning."

Geoffrey began to stammer. "Well couldn't you . . . I mean would it be possible . . . as a matter of fact, what I mean is there's a place along the beach I want awfully to see. I went there once after I had measles, and I want most awfully to see it again. Couldn't you come along? It's awfully pretty. The downs come right down to the edge of the cliff and all that sort of thing."

She looked up, pleased. "Oh, yes. That would be nice! If we can get Miss Evers out of the water, we can go along after we've bathed."

Geoffrey grew scarlet. "I didn't mean all four of us," he jerked out. "I meant couldn't we go just two . . ." his voice trailed away.

Fay looked out to sea. (To be Continued.)

"Rather!" replied Dick, heartily. "But," said his uncle, "how on earth do you manage to tell them apart?"
 "Oh," said the young man "I don't try!"

W. C. T. U. Notes

PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE KINGSTON RIOT

Canada, unfortunately, has dire need of jails and penitentiaries, full to overflow, and still more cell room would be a great convenience. Can it be that Canadians are satisfied with social conditions as they are?

At the Kingston, Ont., penitentiary there has been a riot. The first arresting thought caused by this incident, should be, to every one who enjoys civil liberty and appreciates what this means, the question: to what extent have I personally contributed to full jails and rioting criminals?

There is altogether too much of a general impression prevailing that we who are on the outside of prison walls have no responsibility for the crimes committed by others. In all probability there is scarcely a soul inside Kingston's cells who has not been entangled by the drinking temptations that have been made legal by Canada's electorate at the polls.

Drink, more frequently than not, is the open enticing gate to every class of crime. This Kingston riot should incite followers of Christ to search life's record for the result of that telling possession, personal influence. It is not necessary to drink and to mix socially with imbibers to be a decoy. The great sin of placing the temptation of drink in the way of others has been committed simply by dropping a white bit of paper in a ballot-box.

MANY DRY PRONOUNCEMENTS BY ROYAL COMMISSION

The importance of the concessions by way of pronouncements against the liquor traffic by the British Royal Licensing Commission's Report after a two years' consideration should never be forgotten in the wet and dry struggle going on the world over.

One was "that the use of alcohol as an aid to work, whether physical or mental, is physiologically unsound." The science of living beings, in relation to intoxicants is thus authoritatively covered.

This pronouncement of these commissioners verded in natural science naturally leads to the following: "We accept the view that every child ought to receive specific and systematic instruction as to the properties of alcohol."

Years ago Wendell Phillips wrote: "Furnace your reform to the school house, and the school text books, and its victory is only a question of time." One of the great advocates of the W. C. T. U. everywhere has been the including of Scientific Temperance in the school textbooks.

The riot at the Kingston, Ont., penitentiary where part of the demand was for cigarette paper in place of the pipe allowance, should bring this matter of nicotine in its deadliest form—cigarettes—into a place of public discussion and consideration that the dangers, physical, mental and spiritual, demand.

Luther Burbank discussed this serious question in the following unusual light: "What a shock people would get if they went through the cemeteries and saw tombstones declaring the fact that this man died of typhoid made fatal by a tobacco weakened heart, and that the man succumbed to nervous currency one must look up the recent exchange rate and do some multiplying.

The Commission looked in the direction of Local Option by urging the Government "to give the people the power to protect themselves against the liquor traffic in their own localities by their direct vote, especially that residents on new housing areas shall be armed with the power to protect their own neighborhood from the incursion of new licensees for the sale of intoxicating drinks."

THE STAND OF THE W. C. T. U. REGARDING CIGARETTES

From the hour of its organization the W. C. T. U. has been blessed with the eye of the prophet of old, and it is pledged: "That we are strongly opposed to the use of tobacco in any form, and that we especially pledge ourselves to work against the manufacture of cigarettes, and their sale to the youth of all lands."

The riot at the Kingston, Ont., penitentiary where part of the demand was for cigarette paper in place of the pipe allowance, should bring this matter of nicotine in its deadliest form—cigarettes—into a place of public discussion and consideration that the dangers, physical, mental and spiritual, demand. Luther Burbank discussed this serious question in the following unusual light: "What a shock people would get if they went through the cemeteries and saw tombstones declaring the fact that this man died of typhoid made fatal by a tobacco weakened heart, and that the man succumbed to nervous prostration because tobacco had shot his nerves to pieces, and another one gave up the ghost because tobacco had ruined his stomach. Yet when a smoker dies of pneumonia the doctor's death certificate gives pneumonia and not tobacco as the cause of death. And the tombstone man with his chisel says nothing at all."

UNDER THE COVER OF LEGAL SALE

The workings of the Liquor Control Act in Canada can be judged by the boldness of the illegal liquor trade. Probably the biggest still ever manipulated in this country was discovered some weeks ago in the City of Hamilton, Ont., but the wonder is how all its perfection of detail was worked out without evoking police detection. It required a three and one half story stone and brick building to house this still valued at $25,000, capable of producing 300 gallons of pure alcohol every twelve hours, and guarded by a fierce police dog.

The still was described as a "masterpiece of construction, rivaling many in regular distilleries. In the cellar were five great wooden vats, each with a capacity of 8,000 gallons of mash."

If it had not been for the protection of a legal liquor business all this illegal business in preparation and performance could not possibly have been accomplished. To quote Mrs. F. C. Ward, Dominion W. C. T. U. President, at the Ontario convention in October: "The total amount expended by the Province for alcoholic beverages in four years and five months was $235,575,320. This does not account for the illicit bootlegging trade, which, judging from the infractions of the law, is everywhere in mid-t."

Chemists-Shops Are Landmarks

(Canadian Press)
 STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Dec. 9.—The chemists' shops in Stockholm are quite venerable institutions judging from a recently published report. The seven oldest shops in Stockholm have a combined age of 1860 years or an average of 265 years each. The oldest one is "The Lion", originally the drug dispensary of the royal palace, which can celebrate its 310th anniversary. It is an old tradition amongst Swedish druggists to give names to their shops, which are a gilt sculpture representing an animal after which they are named as sign-board. Thus, "The Lion", there is a "Raven", "White Bear", a "Swan", an "Ox", a "Deer", a "Unicorn", a "Griffin", etc.

The present Swedish chemists' shops are most dignified institutions, elaborately fitted up and furnished. The apothecaries have high standing and have to undergo long and careful training and examinations before being admitted to practice.

Mothers, Mix This At Home for a Bad Cough

Saves $2. So Easy! No Cooking!

You'll be pleasantly surprised when you make up this simple home mixture and try it for a distressing cough. It's no trouble to mix, and costs but a trifle, yet it can be depended upon to give quick and lasting relief.

Make a syrup by stirring 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water for a few moments until dissolved. No cooking needed. Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, put it into a 16 oz. bottle, and fill up with your sugar syrup. The 16 ounces thus made costs no more than a small bottle of ready-made medicine, yet it is the most effective remedy that money can buy. Keeps perfectly and tastes fine.

This simple remedy has a remarkable three-fold action. It soothes and breaks the inflamed membrane, loosens the germ-laden phlegm, and clears the air passages. Thus it makes breathing easy, and lets you get restful sleep.

Pinex is a compound of Norway Pine, in concentrated form, famous as a healing agent for throat membranes. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.
