General Retires To Enter Politics

LONDON, Jan. 25 — (CP Cable) —Maj.-Gen. C. B. Price of Montreal today announced his retirement from the post of Overseas Commissioner of the Canadian Red Cross and said he was returning to the Dominion to enter politics.

He did not indicate what seat if any he intended to contest nor under what party affiliations he would act.

Succeeding him is Col. C. M. Frost of Halifax who for five years has been assistant Red Cross chief overseas.

MAYFIELD, England — (CP) — Mrs. Maud Bradley had two cakes when she celebrated her 100th birthday — one with 100 candles and another with a Union Jack, an airplane and a man-of-war.

Grey North Becoming Symbol Says Godfrey

OWEN SOUND, Ont., Jan. 25 — (CP) — Grey North is becoming the symbol of what the average Canadian feels about the vital problems which will finally be decided at a general election in a few months, Air Vice-Marshal A. Earl Godfrey, C.C.F. candidate in the Grey North Federal by-election Feb. 5, said tonight.

"If the Liberals (Defence Minister McNaughton) win this election, they will claim it represents a complete endorsation of Liberal policies throughout the war," Mr. Godfrey told a political rally.

"They are now saying that the only question is whether Defence Minister McNaughton is to have a seat in the House of Commons. But I want you to imagine what will happen if McNaughton wins.

"The day after the election Mackenzie King will hold a press conference. Will he say to the reporters, 'of course, gentlemen the Grey North by-election has no national significance. It was only to give Mr. McNaughton a seat and that was the only thought in the voters' minds?' Will he say that if the Liberals win, he will not.

"He will claim that everything the Liberal government has done, and everything they have left undone, has been approved by the electors. A Liberal victory in Grey North will be interpreted as a complete justification of the manpower muddle and of every other Liberal failure."

Annual Meeting of Maritimers in Ontario

"Service to the Provinces down by the sea in which we were born and to Canada as a whole, in promoting understanding and good will, is the chief purpose of this organization," said R. W. E. Burnaby, at the annual banquet and election of officers of the Maritime Provinces Association of Ontario, in Toronto recently.

Reports showed that thousands of comforts had been sent to men on the two corvettes adopted by the Association, the "Fredericton" and the "Halifax", and that hundreds of men in training in Toronto from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island were guests of honor at a series of entertainments held during the year.

Mrs. Daisy Hinds was convener of a program which was enjoyed by about 200 Maritimers and W. W. MacPhee, retiring president, conducted the election of the following executive officers of the Association: Past presidents, K. M. Smith and A. C. Dand, Mrs. J. G. Settle, R. A. Webster, Prof. F. C. Auld, Mrs. P. F. McAlonen, H. MacLeod, Mrs. L. S. Gardiner, Miss M. Baltzer, Mrs. M. Dolmont, P. N. Gullison, Mrs. Gullison, Mrs. Daisy Hinds, Eugene Denton, Miss L. R. Kennedy, Miss Pauline Lea, Miss Lena McLure, Miss J. Marquis, Miss M. Mullins, T. J. Mullins, Miss M. J. McInnis, Miss M. MacDonald, B. L. Porter, Mrs. H. Younker, Mrs. J. W. Bateman, Mrs. L. H. Black, V. T. MacIntosh, Mrs. Ronald Critchley, Miss Eva Clark, C. A Byrnes, Mrs. Byrnes, R. W. E. Burnaby, Capt. J. E. Bell and Mrs. Bell.

Dr. Sidney E. Smith, president of the University of Toronto; G. Frnak Beer, S. H. Logan, Most Rev. Archbishop J. C. McGuigan, J. A. McLeod, B. L. Mitchell, John A. Tory, and Dr. H. P. Whidden, all noted Maritimers, were invited to be honorary patrons of the association.

securely in the colder evening air. The grove of maples on the hill had an enchanting coral background and tall spires of spruce rising about their dark-clad kin were flame-held in the loveliness of this evening. Smoke came in an attractive plume from one of the chimneys in the house on the hill. Smoke too from the fire where the men cut and cleared beside the stream clung as if loath to leave it and followed it for a distance cloaking the bordering trees beyond in a thick pall of grey.

Judy—and Jeanie, with other young folk from the corner" went skating this evening. Not to the mill-pond that for the present James has condemned, but to a smaller pond out the Alderlea road. Up the hill and beyond the maplegrove to a delightful sheltered spot lying beside the road. It is known to the Braeside folk, young and older as "Kristy's pond." I hope the name clings so to perpetuate the memory of one of our pioneer families. The lady, who once owned the farm—and the pond—was the last of her line. She was one of a prominent family in the olden-days when ship-building was carried on extensively on "the river." Strange how we suffer traditions of former days, to die when those of the older generations pass away. And so much that was great and good and moving of the pioneer days go down to the graves with those who lived and loved—in those times. Much that might have been woven into fascinating tales to inspire children—and children's children rests with our dead. Nothing of this once prosperous homestead now remains to mark the place, where once a family dwelt. No stick nor stone. But the pond is there—"Kristy's Pond", beside the Alderlea road, where frogs' pipings herald the coming of "the sowing", so beautifully, and girls and boys skate in winter so happily. Wraiths of other children skate there. Those of former generations even in my time, now scattered hither and yon in the Island and other lands or perhaps now asleep in a quiet grave-yard near, or in one far, far, removed from the scene of their childhood sports.

They skated to the light of a young-moon and a bon-fire tonight. "It was very pretty there, with the sparks flying upward from the fire" Judy said. James assumed a look of anxiety when Judy came home. He is certain unused joints will creak at an important time tomorrow evening. Judy only smiled.

And now when it is perilously near the Sabbath, stable and piggery doors creak as some visiting farmers accompany James on his final round. Pard barks at a passing-plane, then went at James whistle to his sleeping quarters in the barn. Now a lantern is carried slowly toward the house across the lane. Jock homing. James is also in the yard, pausing a moment to say "Good night" to the visitors who hurry away on the short-cut to the mill, and the hands of the old clock that paused briefly at the same stopping-place have suddenly parted, the big one continuing on its way, to tick off the minutes of this new day, the day that Judy terms "the very best day of all the week—The Sabbath.

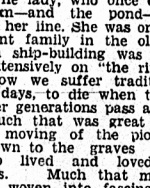
Help the Young People To Health - Happiness


What a common sight to see a young person whose bloodless face and feeble frame are evidences of poor circulation and weakness where bounding health and rosy cheeks should reign.
Young people in such a condition are generally of an anaemic nature and require a preparation containing iron to improve the blood content.
Milburn's Health and Nerve Pills meet this requirement, as they contain three concentrated forms of iron of an easily assimilated nature together with other valuable ingredients indicated for building up the system and helping to improve the blood content.

IN MEMORIAM

The death occurred at Murray Harbor, P. E. I., of Mrs. David Reynolds on November 7, 1944, at the age of 72. The late Mrs. Reynolds before her marriage was Mary Anne Roberts, born at Beach Point, P. E. I. Mrs. Reynolds had suffered from diabetes for a considerable length of time and a few days before her death was taken critically ill. All that medical care and nursing could do was not enough to effect her recovery and she was called to her rest.

She is survived by a daughter, Doris, Mrs. Lester White, also by a sister, Mrs. William Beer, Pictou, N. S., and two brothers, Thomas Roberts, Murray Harbor and George Roberts, Pictou, N. S. One son ,Clarence was killed in action during the First World War.

The funeral was held on November 18th. A short service was held at her late residence followed by a service at the United Church, Murray Harbor. Her pastor, Rev. Roy Vessey, spoke from the text "Now this I say brethren that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God." Interment was in the Murray Harbor cemetery. The pall bearers were Carl Richards, Luther Heiring, Garnet Penny, Thomas Fraser, Robert Bell and Silas Hugh. The sympathy of the community goes to the bereaved. 1-27-1i.

CHAPTER XIV

Serena could not bring herself to say "and no more money," not even to Dexter. But he knew what she meant. He answered her with increasing gentleness. "I'm sure Hite and I can manage to look after the cattle and the milk route too if you and Mr. Farman find you do have to go. I don't know just how we'd work it out, but we'll find a way."

"Well, we thought maybe Hite could look out for your stock right along instead of once in a while, seeing he's so near anyway, and boards with his family and all. And then maybe you could move up to our house."

"Well, I could of course, if that would make your minds any easier. And with Rhoda gone—"

"Yes, that's what we thought. And maybe, if you were right there, and she saw how it was and all, Judith would marry you straight off as soon as she got out of quarantine. She'll be out in just a short time now. Maybe before Daniel and I would have to go to Washington. That is, if we do have to go. And it would ease our minds. Things would look a lot different to us, Dexter, if you really were our son-in-law, if we had a right—"

"You've got every right. You know I've always felt as if you were my mother. Well, now you're going to be. Straight off, just as you said. Don't worry any more, please don't—Mother Farman. Judith will see how it is. I can talk to her. She's not like Jenness. She's steady and sensible and straightforward. You don't know how thankful I am that she is. I'll go and get her, the minute Dr. Barnes will let me, and on the way home I'll tell her—please, Mother Farman—please don't cry."

Disturbing Discovery

He went out of the barn with her, helped her into the second hand car, and stood looking after her until it swung out of sight over the crest of the hill. Then he went back to the books on which he had been working when she came in. As a selectman of the town it was one of his duties to appraise property and report on his findings. Now he picked up his pad of scratch paper and looked at it again: Adelbert Hellman's name headed the list with taxable farm property valued at twenty thousand dollars; but Karl Wargner, the new merchant, ran him a close second. August Lippman, Berthold Becker and Hilda Krauss would all find their local responsibilities heavy also . . .

An eerie feeling of uneasiness crept over him as he glanced at the list, his eyes straying from the figures in the right hand column to to the names on the left. It was the first time he had grouped them this way and together they seemed to take on a meaning which separately they had not possessed. He read them over once more, half aloud—Hellman, Wagner, Lippman, Becker, Krauss— why those were all German names!

He laid the pad down on his desk and walked over to the window, intent on a new train of thought. But glancing out, almost subconsciously, he saw that he had another caller. As he came closer, Dexter could see that his face was florid, but there was nothing about this ruddiness which suggested that he was cold; like the frosty blue of his eyes it seemed a natural part of his fair coloring. He was wearing a handsome coat, rather formal in style, its wide fur collar buttoned up closely around his throat ,and his hands were encased in heavy leather gloves. He took the seat beside the fire, recently occupied by Serena, introducing himself and broaching the object of his errand almost simultaneously.

Talking Business

I hope I do not intrude, Mr. Abbott? No? The lady of the house—your sister, is it not so?—told me that I should find you here. Well! I shall nevertheless be brief. My name is Meyer, Gustav Meyer. I am associated with the real estate company of Archer, Lamb & Archer in Chicago. Doubtless you know it by reputation; it is one of the best firms in the city. But let me give you my card."

He produced it with something of a flourish. Dexter took it, studied it for a minute, and then laid it down on his desk beside the pad of scratch paper on which he had scribbled the names of Hellman, Wagner, Lippman, Becker and Krauss.

"I don't happen to, but then I almost never get to Chicago," he said civilly. "Is your firm interested in New England real estate, Mr. Meyer?"

"Yes. That is it exactly, Mr. Abbott. You have grasped my purpose. Archer, the senior member of the firm I represent, is very much interested in New England real estate, especially in the rural regions along the Connecticut River. He feels that an excellent market has been inexplicably overlooked. Such splendid scenery! Such fertile soil! Such wonderful dairy country! Such fine timberland!"

"You couldn't describe them better if you came from one of our own state publicity bureaus, Mr. Meyer."

"Ah! I see you like your little joke, Mr. Abbott. I also. But on this occasion I am most serious. Not to take up too much of your so valuable time, I should venture to inquire if by chance you know of some desirable properties in your own beautiful town which might be for sale."

"I'm afraid I don't. As it happens there's already been quite a boom in real estate here. All the places that were on the market have been sold already."

"All? You're positive of that, Mr. Abbott? Because I have here the name of a property which Mr. Willis Archer feels certain would be very interesting to one of his clients."

Well Informed

The name of a property? We dont often name our places around here, Mr. Meyer, the way people do in the south. I'm afraid I don't know what property you mean."

"Excuse me. I did not speak correctly. I know you are right, Mr. Abbott. I know that New England properties are not invariably named in the same manner, shall we say, as southern plantations. But often they go by names of the family. The one to which I refer is called—" Mr. Meyer paused to consult a paper which, up to that moment, he had held neatly folded in his well kept hands—"Farman Hill."

"Then I can tell you very positively, Mr. Meyer, that the property in which you are interested is not for sale."

"You are sure, Mr. Abbott? Excuse me. Of course I should not dispute you. But sometimes outsiders are informed of matters which are not discussed in a neighborhood. Is it not so? Now Mr. Willis Archer has been informed most reliably that the Farman family might be persuaded to sell this property if the figure were sufficiently high."

"A distinguished client of Mr. Archer desires a country estate of a certain elevation. It appears that Farman Hill meets this particular requirement. The distinguished client also desires a certain amount of woodland. In this respect it appears that Farman Hill more than meets the requirement. If I am not mistaken it has on it—"

Mr. Meer again consulted his neat paper—"a large lot covered with pine, and somewhat apart, another large tiber lot. This is not to mention a second elevation even higher than Farman Hill itself which is, I believe called Jeromes's Hill, and which is well covered with heavy spruce and balsam fir."

In Memoriam

In loving memory of Richard Pope Newman who passed away January 27th, 1944.
Just one year ago today dear Father,
Since you left this world of care
To a better home up yonder
And we hope to meet you there.

Oft do our thoughts wander
To a grave not far away,
Where we laid our darling father
Just one year ago today.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of my dear Father, Russell Graham, who died January 27th, 1942.

Tonight I know you are sleeping
With one we know you loved well
There's a bright golden star in our window
Which is always shining for you,
But mid all the sorrows you left us
Fond thought of you still remain
For we know you are resting in Heaven
Where there is no sorrow or pain
But still in our old home we are weeping
For the ones we so dearly loved
But darling our days may be weary
There's a bright golden star for us all.

Coldwell Hints at Liberal "Pressure" Applied to C.C.F.

OWEN SOUND, Ont., Jan. 25 — (CP) — M. J. Coldwell, national leader of the C. C. F. said in an interview today that the "Liberal party" had put "every pressure that could be put upon me to keep out of the North Grey by-election of Feb. 5."

Mr. Coldwell, here to speak in support of Air Vice-Marshal A. E. Godfrey, C.C.F. candidate, said the Progressive Conservative party was annoyed because the C. C. F. party had put a candidate in the field. The Progressive Conservatives, however, had not put any pressure on him to keep his party's candidate out of the contest, said Mr. Coldwell.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King could under law call off the by-election by dissolving parliament. He did not know whether Mr. King would take such a step which would "be evidence that he expects certain defeat in the by-election."
