LITTLE REVEALS

Mothers whose husbands were in the service were the strong hand of the law. The speaker commended the work done by the faithful few who have been wards of the society since the police is essential. SUGGESTS CURFEW

(Continued from page 1) native but to submit my immediate resignation," said he did not want to enter into a prolonged controversy but he believed it was in the national interest to give in some detail account of the developments which, viewed in retrospect, made my resignation inevitable. He said that at a July 30 conference with Prime Minister Mackenzie King an understanding had been reached on the four basic principles in the administration of selective service. These principles were:

1. That manpower policy must be decided by the Cabinet through its manpower committee. 2. That the administration of the manpower policy must rest with the Minister of Labor except in the case of appeal in respect of the transfer of a man from one main within the jurisdiction of the department of National War Service. 3. That as soon as the administrative machinery of national selective service had been sufficiently extended and improved it should undertake the administration of the transfer of a man from one main within the jurisdiction of the department of National War Service. 4. That the employment offices of the unemployment insurance commission be placed under the jurisdiction of the department of Labor.

He said that between the conference and the date of his resignation "exactly three and a half months transpired—three months during which the country's manpower shortage was growing hourly more critical and unmanageable."

Then he gave an outline of his version of what happened in the intervening period. "Despite the definite understanding in July that the draft machinery was to be transferred to the department of Labor to be administered by the director of National Selective Service it was two months before the order-in-council was issued that effected," he said. He added the order, fixed Dec. 1, 1942, as the date of transfer.

He said that during Mr. Mitchell's absence he and associates prepared another comprehensive memorandum containing a series of recommendations. He said the memorandum contained a five-page summary of the general manpower situation and a draft order-in-council establishing National Selective Service as a clear-cut branch within the department of Labor, defining its powers and those of the director. The reason why an attempt was made to define these powers, he said, was the belief that earlier and very definite powers would be granted to the director of National Selective Service was "too far-reaching" and "impracticable" in a democratic country. He said the new proposal was to limit this authority and to "give the residue adequate definite means for enforcement."

Then he recalled the events leading to his resignation. "I deemed these proposals so urgent that I sought a discussion with my Minister and the Prime Minister on the day the Minister returned from England." He found he would not

June And Sept. Set Records This Year

Unusual weather conditions, this year were probably responsible in part at least for the oddities noticed in recent weeks in the vegetable world. All fall reports have been heard of ripe strawberries being picked and of flowers remaining in bloom long after they usually fade. A review of weather conditions over the past forty years and more indicates this year has been unusual in two respects. First a period of drought in June was exceeded only once in the month in the past forty years and that was in June, 1909 when 0.73 inches of rain fell compared with 0.81 this year.

Basic Principles

1. That manpower policy must be decided by the Cabinet through its manpower committee. 2. That the administration of the manpower policy must rest with the Minister of Labor except in the case of appeal in respect of the transfer of a man from one main within the jurisdiction of the department of National War Service.

Violent Force Required

Dr. J. C. Simpson, medical practitioner living in Summerside, recalls Sunday June 21st last. Examined a body that day which was that of an Indian woman. He found a depressed fracture of the skull, a fracture of the right upper arm, a fractured dislocation of the right hip, a fracture near the lower leg and minor bruises on different parts of the body. The skull fracture would cause death. It would take a very violent force to cause this fracture.

Mitchell Not Interested

When he could not get the Minister on the telephone he called at his house, leaving a copy of his memorandum with an accompanying letter urging immediate support for the proposals.

Inexorable Delay

Then he gave an outline of his version of what happened in the intervening period. "Despite the definite understanding in July that the draft machinery was to be transferred to the department of Labor to be administered by the director of National Selective Service it was two months before the order-in-council was issued that effected," he said.

Evidence Completed In Manslaughter Trial

Accused Takes Stand In Own Defence; Case Likely To Go To Jury Today.

The trial of J. Sutherland MacKay, charged with manslaughter, continued before Mr. Justice A. E. Arsenault at the Summerside Court House yesterday. The accused gave evidence on his own behalf and there were five other witnesses for the defense and seven for the Crown. This concluded the evidence and it is expected the case will go to the jury today. Hon. T. A. Campbell, K.C., Attorney-General and L. C. Lewis, K.C., are acting for the Crown and Mr. E. P. McPhee, K.C., and Mr. W. Henry Noonan for the defense.

Was With Accused

Stewart McKay of Springfield, had known accused all his life. Remembered the last. On that evening he went with accused to Summerside. They picked up a passenger by the name of Phillips at the south side of the road in Summerside both the accused and witness had a drink of moonshine. Later they had a half drink each. They had no other liquor that night.

He left Summerside around 12 o'clock. After turning Travelers Rest corner the witness saw a bus ahead. The accident occurred around 30 or 35 miles an hour. Somewhere between Travelers Rest and Kensington he heard glass breaking and something dragging on the pavement. Didn't feel anything. Accused stopped 'he and both got out. Saw the accused pick it up and put it back in place. After the noise had died down the witness saw the accused said "we must have hit a stone." The accused went back to look for any other parts. The accused had applied the brakes gradually.

The witness was working at the farm of the accused. At noon on that day they heard about the accident to Mrs. Gallant, which they went to Charlottetown to report the accident.

Cross-examined by Mr. McPhee witness said he and accused were both sober. Did not see any women on the road. Re-examined by the Attorney-General witness said he was not in the habit of drinking. He is 18 years old in December. The drink was not pleasant tasting but there was no kick from it.

Look For Trademarks You Can TRUST. Thrifty buyers look for trademarks which have established themselves as reliable. Penmans have always been careful to preserve the highest standards which have made their trademark—the famous Pen-Angle—a guide to quality knit wear. It is everyone's duty today to take exceptional care of all purchases. Do these two things: Buy good quality. Conserve what you buy.

Penman's KNITTED PRODUCTS UNDERWEAR . . . HOSIERY . . . OUTERWEAR. THE PRINCESS OF GRATZEN By Louis Arthur Cunningham, Author of "Of These Three Loves," "Marionette," etc.

Madame looked from the picture to Rudolph and her thick gray-black brows wrinkled like caterpillars. "So what?" she had asked. "This is the—what is it we say?"—dark mutton. "It was the black sheep, madame." "I was exiled. I was very young then. I vowed to me that I would be wealthy that I would own a chateau that would make the castle of Gratzen look like a cowshed. So, madame, he failed. He bit his lip. He looked miserably out at the great green park, the wonderful gardens and vast lawns of the chateau. He saw the biscuit-made millions of Jean Pierre Gossec had created high up in the loneliest part of the Laurentian Mountains was the widow of Jean Pierre Gossec's widow, whom in youth he had adored on the stage as Mimi Fabre. Ah, he had adored his little white roly-poly, Jean Pierre. The memory of the way he had loved her, cherished her, watched over her, seen never a change in attention by Mr. Hickox who was removing his heater. The same dent was there after the accident. The accused testified that in the Fall of 1940 he was a neighbor was driving when something hit the front of the car and he heard glass breaking. The light was broken and also the hood and radiator. Saw two junks of slabs behind the car. Witness said that the drinks had no effect on him. He said when he bought the car they were four tires on it and a new tire on the spare. Sometime in May replaced the right front tire with the spare. Cross-examined by the Attorney-General witness said that the moonshine was not pleasant to taste but had no effect on him. He was still sober and capable of driving a car. When the light was broken he heard a bang but did not feel anything. Had not changed the right front tire since May. Did not listen to news Sunday of Monday. Witness admitted the dents on the inside of the fender and the engine hood were new dents and there was hardly any scratching on them as if they had been hit by a solid object.

Charles Gaudet private in the army, had lunch with accused and Stewart MacKay on evening of June 21st, drove with them from the King Cafe to the Olympia. They were perfectly sober.
