MEND IT OR END IT.

The above was the cry of the Liberal party when in opposition some years ago with regard to the Senate. On coming into power they did neither the one nor the other of the things proposed, but filled up the vacancies as they occurred until a good party majority was obtained in the Upper House. Now that the indemnity of Senators has been increased to $25.00 each, and the annual cost of the Upper Chamber has been run up to something like $400,000 a year, it is quite natural that the old cry of twenty years ago should be again raised. For never was the Senate more useless, more idle or more subservient to the dictates of the government than it has shown itself to be during the past session. Never did it exercise less judicious criticism of public measures, originate less useful legislation or do less to justify its existence than within the past few years.

Still we have not reached the conclusion that the Senate ought to be abolished. We believe in the two-chamber system for the supreme Parliament in any country where representative government prevails. Both parties have failed in respect of the distribution of work as between the two Houses. The Senate is capable of doing much more and better work than it does. One great fault in our parliamentary methods, where most of the measures of importance are Government measures, is that very few of them are introduced in the Senate. There is no good reason why from one third to one half of the Government bills should not first be introduced in The Upper House, and be there discussed, amended and perfected so that discussion might be shortened when they reach the Commons. To effect this there ought to be some infusion of younger blood into the Senate. Of late the leaders of both parties in that House have been men of past four score years, a condition not the most desirable that could be imagined.

It becomes more and more evident that either our parliamentary institutions are not well contrived or well operated. One House does little real work and the other is far too fruitful of talk. Parliament is not by any means a business-like body. It sits seven months to accomplish the work that ought to be done, and better done in three months. The blame falls upon the Senate because the Commons does the work as well as the talking and has the ear of the country. Its proceedings are reported in the leading newspapers while neither press nor people appear to pay any attention to what the Senate says or does except upon extraordinary occasions and at wide intervals of time. These are not healthful conditions. There is something radically wrong with the system or its working whichever party is in power. The Senate at Washington is far from being a model legislative body, but it holds a position of comparatively equal importance in the eyes of the nation with the House of Representatives. Unless something can be done to galvanise the Canadian Senate into life and influence, especially that it has now become one half more costly than ever, it must speedily be put on the defensive against a new and persistent movement for its abolition.

CHARLOTTE GEDDIE MONTGOMERY.

The sudden death of Miss Charlotte Geddie Montgomery of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, and for nineteen years missionary in Persia came as a shock to her large circle of relatives and friends. The cause for which she devoted her life and her fine Christian character deserve that her memory should find more than a passing notice.

Miss Montgomery was born in Malpeque March 11th 1855. At an early age she confessed Christ and united with the Presbyterian Church at Malpeque, under the ministry of Rev Robert Laird.

She received her early education in the Fanning Grammar School and afterwards in the Prince of Wales College from which she received a grammar school license, being the first female in this Province to obtain this distinction. She taught in Long River, Malpeque grammar school, and Summerside.

Into the Montgomery home to spend his last days came the grandfather, Rev. John McGary who had been a missionary from the Methodist Church in Ireland to Newfoundland, and the missionary spirit of the late Dr. Geddie in his tours through the Island, had permeated many homes. In the Montgomery home Miss Annie responded to missionary influences and offered her service to our own Church in Trinidad. But there was delay. She then offered her services to the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in U. S., was accepted and appointed to Persia, soon after, but too late, word was received that she was wanted in Trinidad. It was mainly from her older sister, Annie that Miss Charlotte imbibed the missionary spirit, and decided to give up her life to the same work. In 1871 her father died and she remained at home until the death of her mother in 1886. Then she offered her services to the same Board, and joined her sister in Persia the same year. She was appointed teacher in the "Faith Hubbard school" for girls in Hamadan. During the whole of Miss Charlotte Montgomery's nineteen years service in Persia, she was closely identified with the work of the school. She enjoyed two furloughs. The first in 1891 and 5 when she visited her home and made a tour of the American churches speaking in behalf of the women in Persia. Her second visit was in 1903 and 4, the memory of which is still redolent with the keen interest which she manifested in the mission, and the large grasp she had of the work in its every detail.

In the autumn Miss Montgomery returned to the work of the school. Some months after in consultation with the physicians in Teheran it was found that she must come for a surgical operation to New York where the best skill was available, and the bracing conditions of America were more favorable.

Miss Montgomery arrived in New York May 31st, the operation took place on Monday (June 5th.) The strain was severe but there were no alarming symptoms developed until early on the following Saturday morning, when she passed away at 9 o'clock.

Her remains were brought to the Island and interred in the family plot in Malpeque, under the shadow of the Church where she gave her heart to the work of the Master.

Miss Montgomery was a beautiful type of Christian womanhood, amiable and gentle in disposition, strong and firm in her convictions; an excellent teacher who placed the needs of others before her own; and held in peculiarly high esteem by the Missionary Board. Her submission to her Father's will and devotion to his work are shown in a sentence taken from her last letter written to Mr. Speer, the Secretary of Foreign Missions, when the Drs. informed her that her case was such that her return to America was imperative.

MY DEAR MR. SPEER,

I had very little thought when I wrote you last, that my next letter would be written on my way to America. I came to Teheran and in full assurance that I might be away from my work three or four weeks at the most. Had I known that it would end in my being sent to America I might not have said anything about my trouble and worked on as long as I could. My better judgment tells me that would not have been right. Truly nothing has come to me as hard as this. I do not mean my physical condition, or the thought of any suffering that may be in store for me. I knew all that before leaving Hamadan, but still I could be happy and thought I could be submissive but deep down in my heart I was making one reservation, say anything dear Lord but that. The cup, I felt, was too hard for me, and that was, that I should have to leave Persia, but that was required of me."

Though Miss Montgomery has been so long absent from us and her work has been under the American Board, still she was ours, we gave her to that service, and her life, work and character claims a place in our annals as well as in theirs.

Her brothers are Donald, William and George. Her sisters are Mrs. Gordon and Mrs. Ritchie in Malden, Mass., Annie in Persia, Mrs. D. Montgomery in Iowa, and Mrs. George Matheson in Rustico, P. E. Island.—Com.
