Where Eye Troubles Begin

Most eye troubles begin in childhood. A little abuse—a little strain in the eye—may cause much more after maturity. The slightest symptom should be looked into. Often, if glasses are prescribed in time—actual disease is prevented—and they can be discarded as the child grows older. Ask your doctor or come to us and have your or your child's eyes tested, and fitted with glasses only if necessary.

WAS NO MIRACLE.

Good Dame Brovosts Brought Back from the Brink of the Grave.

She had Bright's Disease, Heart Disease and Rheumatism and was Ready to Lie Down and Die, but now she is Strong and Happy Once More.

St. MAGLOIRE, Que., Oct. 31.—There is no happier woman in all Quebec to-day than the good dame Louis Brovosts. Two years ago broken in health and spirits she had almost resolved to give up the struggle. To feeble to work, tortured with the pains of Rheumatism suffering from Bright's Disease and Heart Trouble, she was apparently only waiting for the grave to close over her. Today she is a strong, hearty, happy woman. No, it was no miracle that brought about the change; her troubles all came from diseased Kidneys, and she used that one sure cure, Dodd's Kidney Pills.

But here is the story as Dame Brovosts tells it herself. She never tires of telling it, for having suffered so much herself she sympathizes with others and is anxious to do what she can to relieve them. "I suffered from Bright's Disease Heart Disease and Rheumatism," she states. "and I was so discouraged I had no hope of being able to find any remedy to save my life. I was so feeble I was unable to do anything. I suffered for sixteen years and a half I suffered with Bright's Disease. "I tried all the medicines in the world and grew worse and worse. There was three months I stopped taking everything and made up my mind to let myself die, without taking any more medicine. "By chance I read one of Dodd's Kidney Pills. The good the first box did surprised me. I have taken twenty boxes and I am well of my Bright's Disease and my Heart Disease and my Rheumatism. I am in perfect health and I am very joyful. Dodd's Kidney Pills saved my life."

A Stage Story.

The ingenue had smuggled her friend, the Shakespearian Reader, across the stage and into the first entrance, says Virginia Tracy, in Collier's Weekly. While the overture was going on a placable gentleman, an Old Stager, stood by to entertain her. Over their heads was a frame of photographs, a likeness of John McCullough conspicuously dividing the centre with a likeness of Laurence Barrett.

"And you've really played with such men as those!" sighed the Shakespearian Reader.

"With both those very men. For a coincidence I first saw those two together. But that night I was in the audience."

"It must have been a memorable night!"

"Well, yes, you might call it that. It was a long time ago."

"Tell me about it," said the Reader, who was sentimental.

"Well," said the Old Stager, "they were playing 'Richard III.' that night, and, as McCullough was only doing Richmond, he was on the door." "He was what?"

"On the door—to watch the ticket box, you know. You see, it was their own venture, and they weren't so very exalted then. Everybody in town knew McCullough, though; there was a little bar to one side of the entrance, I remember, and whenever a friend came in or out, or a fellow who wanted to be seen with a star, McCullough would amble across and have a drink."

The Shakespearian Reader rustled protestingly. "I think myself it would have been better if Barrett had had them. Mr. Barrett was an exceedingly conscientious man, and the conditions under which he was appearing that night were very depressing to him. The stage was so small that you could scarcely walk about without turning round, and the borders (they're the little canvas pieces of sky that hang over an outdoor set) were so close above the stage that whenever he held his head up it came in contact with them—and Barrett wasn't a tall man, either. And whether or not it was because the whole town was in front, they hadn't been able to get any supers—only one. He was a little, bedraggled, knock-kneed fellow, and he came on for Richard's court, and for Richard's army and for the citizens of London. Melancholy, wasn't it?"

"And you never knew McCullough, so you don't know how funny it was to him. Every time he went across the lobby with a friend, and came back to find Barrett confronted by that single super, or pushing a cloud about with the plume on his helmet and trying to look unconscious and heroic, McCullough thought it funnier and funnier. When at last he went behind to dress for Richmond he was ready to give everything; but passing Mr. Barrett, and seeing him so sad and patient and determined, he was remorseful. He resolved, out of sheer loyalty, to imitate that conscientious spirit. You know Richmond's first entrance—

"Thus far into the bowels of the earth Have we marched on without impediment."

"Yes," said the Shakespearian Reader. "Enter Richmond, Oxford, Blunt, Herbert and others, with drums and colors." The Old Stager smiled.

"Exactly," said he. "Well, McCullough was bent on doing the right thing; he looked straight ahead of him, and he looked solemn; he marched on for that entrance with a regular regal stride and he spoke in that great voice of his that was fit to stir an army. Altogether, he began to be quite puffed up with his own good behavior, and when he came to the peroration, 'In God's name, cheerily on, courageous friends,' he swung martially round to wave on his 'drums, colors,' etc., and he discovered in their place only that one same knock-kneed super that a moment before had been trundling after Barrett as the opposing army! It was too much for McCullough. He took one good long look at the man, and then he waved his sword again, and said he, 'Come on, my solitary friend, we'll lick all England!' The audience rose at him with joy, but they tell me Barrett was like to die of it."

A Foreible Illustration.

That very forcible illustration of the duration of eternity which I quoted last week has been fairly capped by Mr. Geo. A. R. Simpson of Toronto. Years ago Mr. Simpson attended church in Barrie, and heard a sermon on eternity. Mr. Simpson writes:—

"The preacher asked his hearers to imagine this earth of ours to be a huge steel ball 8,000 miles in diameter. On this ball is placed a fly, which is to walk and walk and walk. Then imagine this fly walking until its feet wore out this tremendous steel ball. Can the imagination grasp this? Then will be only at the dawn of eternity."

Who can beat this as an effective illustration?

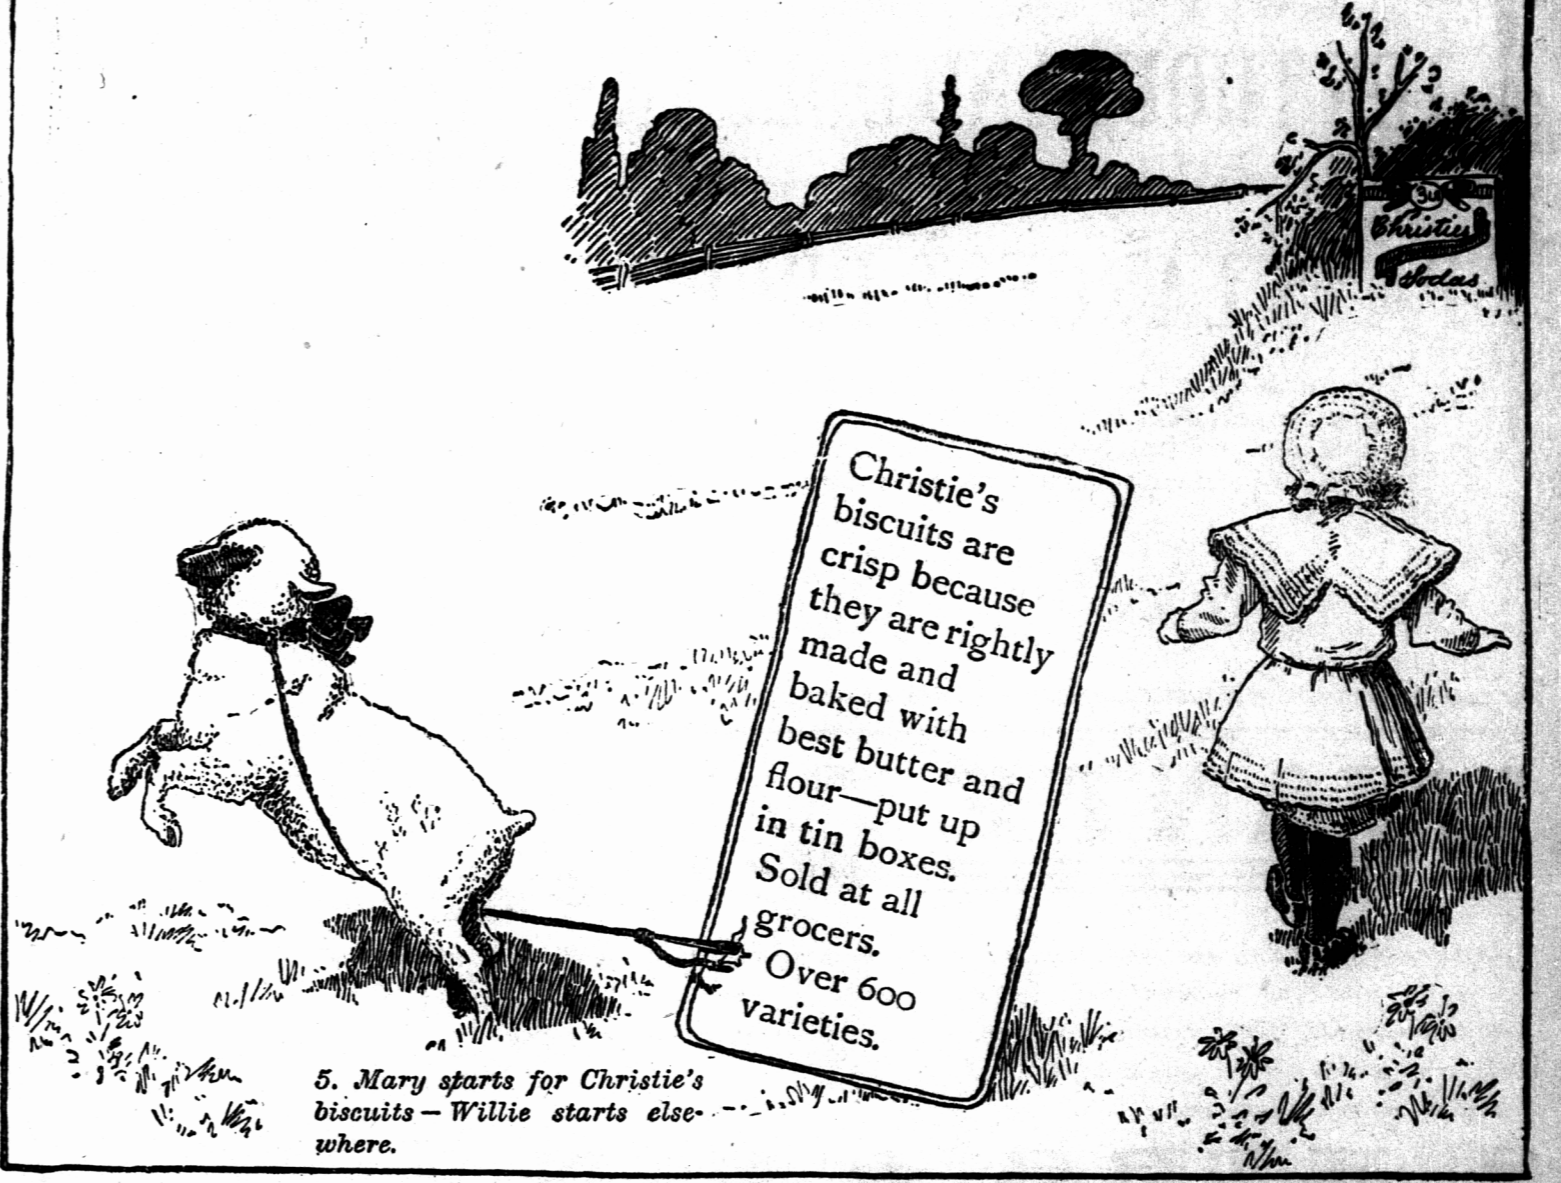

Rules for War.

According to a Bengal native paper, war is less civilized in these days than of old. It unearths a set of rules purporting to be drawn up by opposing Generals in ancient India before war was declared.

- (1) Animosity must end with the war, when the combatants must regard one another as friends.
- (2) The fight must be between equals, that is to say, charioteer must fight with charioteer, cavalry with cavalry, infantry with infantry, etc.
- (3) A man who is not strong enough to fight should be allowed to go scot-free.
- (4) No man is to be struck without previous and distinct warning.
- (5) A man who shows nervousness in war should not be interfered with.
- (6) No one is to be taken a prisoner unawares on any account.
- (7) No man who has been deprived of his arms or armor, or is badly armed, should be hurt.
- (8) The persons of the following classes of people are to be considered sacred: (a) The man who drives a chariot; (b) the bearer who carries a wounded man; (c) the surgeon; (d) the military bandsman.
- (9) Two are not to attack one.
- (10) No tricks (ambushes, etc.) are to be allowed.
