

What You Should Know About Houses

By Mr. B. Evan Parry, F.R.A.I.C.

PLUMBING

In justice to the beauty and value of the completed home, the home builder will find it well worth his time to study carefully the wide variety of durable and attractive plumbing fixtures that are being displayed on showroom floors and in catalogues.

Upon the adequacy of plumbing conveniences depends largely the satisfaction and pride of the owner, and a little foresight in the anticipation of likely future requirements is among the wisest of investments.

Plumbing Puts Personality in the Home

Upon the quality and arrangement of plumbing conveniences depends much of the personality of the home. No longer is the bathroom regarded as a necessary evil to be located in an inconspicuous corner with the least possible expense and attention. It has taken its place among the most important rooms of the home and manufacturers have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars developing handsomely designed fixtures in white and a wide variety of color tones.

The artist and interior decorator have invaded the bathroom. Therefore, the possibilities in effect and efficiency justify some thought, because the bathroom, unlike a heating plant, is a personal service.

Added Facilities Pay Dividends

For many years, except in very large homes, one bathroom was considered sufficient. Fortunately that period, with its inconveniences and irritations, has passed and today families in moderately priced homes demand the services that were formerly beyond their reach.

Where two or three bathrooms are required, it is possible and generally advisable to select two or three different grades of fixtures. For the main or "master" bathroom, a vitreous china pedestal lavatory is popular, harmonizing in color with a built-in type bath and a quietly operating toilet, of which there are some styles available in Canada. And, of course, no bathroom is considered complete today without a shower. This may be installed separately in a glass cabinet, subject to floor space, or in connection with the bath, with a curtain either plain or in color to harmonize with the individual color scheme.

For the second bathroom the fixtures need not be so elaborate. A lower priced type of pedestal lavatory of a conventional wall type would prove satisfactory, as would also a cast iron enameled bath, of which there are several attractive models on the market.

It will invariably be found that a toilet located in the basement, at a surprisingly low additional cost, is one of the most appreciated conveniences in the home.

Some Thoughts on Bathroom Furnishings

Among insurance statistics the bath is rated as an important cause of accidents through slipping. That is why one Canadian manufacturer of bathroom fixtures has introduced a splendid-looking built-in model with handles—placed conveniently on either side in little recesses which can be used as soap trays.

That's a thought worth remembering—and then there is the selection of color and wall tile. There are many types of tile from which to choose, including the beautiful ceramic and various water-proofed compositions.

The advantages of brass and copper pipe for water services, particularly where they are laid beneath tiled flooring, should be considered. True, there is an additional cost, but the comparative permanence of brass and copper pipe more than compensate for that.

For the shower there is a choice of control and mixing valves. A few years ago the mixed chamber "a la shower" took his chances with a freezing blast of cold water or with scalding steam. Today he can temper the water in safety and enjoy the exhilaration of one of the finest of plumbing conveniences.

A shut-off valve installed in the supply line to each fixture in the bathroom is a wise and inexpensive precaution. It permits the periodic renewal of washers and other minor repairs without having to shut off the main house supply.

Be Advised by Specialists

Your architect and plumbing contractor are familiar with the latest improvements in plumbing fixtures, materials and methods of installation. Consult them freely and be influenced by their advice, subject to your own desires, since very often the satisfaction of the family will be affected by the presence or absence of the smallest conveniences.

The Million Dollar Doll

By C. N. & A. M. Williamson

CHAPTER II A FOND FATHER

"What! I didn't suppose there was such an innocent left!" Nazlo laughed. "But then I've never before come across a girl just out of a convent."

"You're a new experience, Miss Desmond. That means a good deal to a biased fellow like me! Do you understand the word—'biased'?"

"Yes," Terry said at the convent. "I learned French at the convent."

"Nazlo beamed. Like most Greeks, he was a natural linguist, and it was pleasant to show off an accomplishment before a pretty girl who could appreciate it. He burst into fluent French, and Terry shyly answered in the same language. The nun who laughed French in the convent was a Parisienne.

The girl's shyness came not from fear of Nazlo as a man, but from distrust of herself, lest she should make some mistake and be shamed in the eyes of a person so clever, so old.

It had always struck her as strange since she came back to the Blue Moon that so many elderly young girls seemed to take an interest in her. Such whispered gossip as she had had in the convent with other girls about "being in love" concerned itself with young men—"boys."

It hadn't yet occurred to her that the aging men who brought pretty little painted things to the inn must put themselves to the trouble of escorting these young things and paying for their meals, because they were their uncles, or friends of the family.

It was true, these faded old eyes could goggle at you in the same silly, fishlike way that boys' eyes had. Still, the poor old men couldn't simply couldn't be in love!

This Mr. Nazlo wasn't exactly old, but he was elderly. It was interesting to speak French with him, and there hadn't been that funny flash in his eyes which gave her a little stab. In spite of the flash, however, she wanted to go in his automobile. She almost prayed that her father would say yes.

"Well, what about it, Mr. Desmond. The Shoe King asked, dropping back into English. "Will you trust me to take your daughter for a blow?"

"Mighty nice of you to trouble over a little girl like her," Terrence answered jauntily. "And I'd like to give her the pleasure."

"I'm afraid, though, I can't spare her this evening. We're slack just now. But people are beginning to come in, and there's always a crowd later on."

The heat of his anger had died down, and his hopes had begun to rise, but he was "too sharp" to show his bad policy. Desmond knew it would be bad policy to throw his daughter at Nazlo's head.

"When did you say you meant to give your casher a holiday?" the Greek smilingly persisted.

"I didn't mention any time, but as a matter of fact I was thinking of letting her off next week, and getting a regular casher."

"Can't you give her an hour or so off now and then, before that?" Nazlo was almost pleading.

"Very much afraid I couldn't, sir," replied Terrence gravely. But he chuckled within. The affair was going like smoke!

Terry was wildly excited the day when she was to know the joy of motoring. She had dreamed of it, and "played" that she was having it, so often! It seemed too good to be true that it was going to happen.

There was a new casher in the restaurant since this morning, and at five o'clock Mr. Nazlo would come for her. She felt almost happy for the first time since her mother's death. She couldn't help being just a little happy!

It was ten minutes to five: time to run downstairs, in case Mr. Nazlo should be early. But the girl paused an instant before the tiny mirror that hung above her dressing table.

She was in mourning, but to her surprise, Father had brought her a present from Oldport; a grey silk motor coat, and a toque to match.

Suddenly the joy of long ago returned in her brain; Julie, in a wonderful grey silk motor and veiled toque, sitting in the drawing-room at Silverwood. "Why, she was nearly as old now as Julie had been then!"

A pang of homesickness shot through her heart, a great longing for Julie's love. It seemed as if the Princess had forgotten her, these days!

She ran downstairs, and into the restaurant, empty save for two or six couples. Desmond, who was in constructing the new casher, stroled over to Terry, at once escorting her to the door.

"Nazlo'll be here any minute," he said. "Glad you won't keep him waiting. He's not the kind for that game."

"Him! You're sort of easy to look at in that hat! Thought 'twould suit you. You can keep your end up, I guess, with any of the peaches Nazlo knows, even the high Society females he's in with since the war."

"But see here, my girl, I'll give you the straight tip—Mind your p's and q's with this fine gentleman."

"What do you mean, Dad?" Terry questioned him, surprised; because Mr. Nazlo was Father's contemporary if not his friend.

"Don't you understand plain English, as well as the French language? Anyhow, haven't you got a woman's instinct?"

"I don't know," stumbled the girl, ashamed of her densesens. "I'll behave politely, if that's what you mean."

"I mean a little more," Terrence caught her up. "Don't make yourself cheap. Let him squeeze your hand, but no kissing—see?"

"Not unless he's popped the question, and I hardly think he'll get to that in the first round, if ever. Still he might. It's up to you, I guess."

Terry stared. She was not a slow witted girl, but the thought that Eustace Nazlo might propose to marry her was so strange that she couldn't take it in.

All she knew at the moment was that the pleasure of her excursion was spoiled. She had an impulse to throw off the motor coat and hat and stamp on them. But at that moment the Rolls Royce drew up before the door!

I AM CAMP
I am Camp.
I am sunlight a sheen on the waters
a mist on the mountain and stars.
I am a doorway out of the commonplace into a vast new adventuring experience.
I am the place where youth learns
the joy of play without a sting,
of fellowship without regrets,
of creative effort that wears not and of a good time that leaves no headache—or headache behind.
I am a new purpose for life that makes the years different.
I am Noise—and silence with a thrill.
I am Laughter—and quiet resolution that seeks the comfort of the hills.
I am Energy—and the touch of living service.
I am Youth—and the slowly emerg-

DIGBY REJECTS BEER BY THE GLASS

Snowed under by an avalanche of votes, the beer and wine proposition for the town of Digby met defeat recently by 33,287, the largest majority ever recorded in the town upon any public question or plebiscite or candidate for election or any other issue.

The vote polled was also the largest, with only one exception, in the history of Digby town. The result of the ballot, practically four to one, leaves no doubt whether beer or wine for sale by glass or open bottle is desired by the residents of Digby.

And hardly had the ballots been counted before Rev. A. A. McLeod, Field Secretary of the Sons of Temperance in Nova Scotia, in a statement declared another Province-wide vote on the question of legal sale of beverage alcohol will later be demanded.

Public sentiment was lined up against the proposed change with predictions of the result so freely expressed by all classes that it was a foregone conclusion days before the polls.

Some were opposed to the change "because it is good enough as it is," others "because there is enough sold now," while many voters satisfied with the Liquor Control Act did not desire any changes in the sale. Temperance advocates voted against the proposition for reasons which have already made public.

Women voters were expected to vote in large numbers and did so, but the male voters lost no time in getting their either.

Cars carried voters to the polls throughout the day and with approximately 600 on the list a record vote was polled, 26 more casting 1929, than the majority of those against prohibition was 83.

Declares Vote Warning

"An indignant citizenship shows their resentment at the polls. The vote today registers the feeling of the people of Nova Scotia against the liquor interests in the first place and the Temperance forces for election and plebiscite acts which clearly protect the rights of the citizens," declared Rev. A. A. McLeod, Field Secretary, Sons of Temperance, in a statement following counting of the ballots.

The vote today is a warning to the brewers and distillers to discontinue their agitation for freer flow of liquor. The Temperance forces believe that the verdict is a forecast of how the people will react when given an opportunity to vote to close the liquor stores. Preparations for a province-wide plebiscite have been under way for some time and a demand will later be made for another vote on the question of the legal sale of beverage alcohol. The vote can also be construed as an emphatic protest against the loose way these election acts are drawn up. Let other towns and cities take warning."

SMOKE UP, LADDIE

How much did you enrich the exercise collection in September of last year? You would be surprised. On cut tobacco you smoked, 1-320,411 pounds; on plug tobacco, 357,519 pounds went up in smoke. Of cigarettes you consumed 401,278,420. Cigars to the number of 11,506,697 were lit up. Snuffed down. And we imported 880,042 pounds of raw leaf tobacco, though we did export some 11,771,290 pounds of leaf.

That was for one month in 1933. In excise duties the Government collected $33,802 on the cigars; $1,568,483 on cigarettes; $352,148 on tobacco; $355,024 on the imported raw leaf tobacco.

So that we, all of us, singly and individually, contributed $2,346,257 to the cost of government, as we sat and sang some ode to the "joy and comfort" of the weed.

Just put those figures in your pipe and smoke them.—Sherbrooke Record

McCORMICK-DEERING

Canadian-Made TWINE In 8-Lb. Balls

"You buy it by the pound, but you use it by the foot." That is what one farmer said after he had been stung with some "bargain counter" twine. He bought his twine by the pound and got full weight. When he put it in the twine can he soon found that full weight does not always mean full length. The length is what you use to tie bundles, but you can't know absolutely that you get all you pay for, even though the ball was full eight pounds.

The safest way is to buy the old reliable, time-tested brand, McCormick-Deering. A half century of twine-making experience is back of every ball. That experience has discovered the way to combine full length with full strength in a ball that is guaranteed for full weight. Every foot is treated against destruction by insects. This last fact is of real value when grasshoppers or crickets are bad.

Insist on McCormick-Deering Twine this season. Available in five and eight pound balls.
