Happenings of The Week

Buckingham Palace Officials are Wondering

how the world's most eligible girl in the world—19-year-old Princess Elizabeth, heir-presumptive to the throne. The latest rumor, from Greek monarchist circles, is that her name with her second cousin, Prince Philip of Greece. But just as in the case of several recent rumors going the rounds of London society, there was nothing to it. Princess Elizabeth, the report goes, shows no signs of favoring any of the young Greek officers and peers of the realm who form her immediate circle of friends. Double her seriousness in her studies. Elizabeth is as gay as any other young girl of 19 and loves to dance. Since her birthday, last April, she has become a regular guest at all the best private dances in London and thinks nothing of returning to Buckingham Palace at 3 a.m. after a party.

When she gave a return party, recently, with her father and mother, Windsor Castle dancing was on until 5 o'clock. The band had gone home two hours previously, but the princess' 21-year-old cousin, Capt. Andrew Elphinstone, who had been a war prisoner in Germany, obliged on the piano.

Like all parents, King George and Queen Elizabeth worry about their daughter's future. They would like her to marry a prince, but they recognize that a certain measure of state control must be exercised over a princess' marriage. Under the Royal Marriage Act, an act of parliament, which governs the marriage of anyone in succession to the throne, no Roman Catholic could marry Princess Elizabeth unless she were prepared to renounce her claim to the throne. And, in the case of the King's formal consent in council must be given before such marriage can be legalized.

Among the King's smart set, gossip continues to mention three names of possible bridegrooms. One is the Earl of Boston, an officer in the Grenadier Guards and an Etonian who is aide de camp of the vicar of India, Lord Wavell. Another is the Duke of Rutland, also 25 and an officer of the Grenadier Guards.

The third gossip choice is another Grenadier, blond, good-looking Lord Wyfold, who is 30. Mayfair saw him escort Princess Elizabeth when she mingled with celebrating crowds on "E" night—and tongues wagged.

Leut. Allan Cosh, R.C.N., and his bride, have arrived from New York and are at Holland Cove for a few weeks before visiting the groom's parents in this city.

Matthews, in Montreal. Mrs. Legate was a principal director civilian relief clothing Red Cross overseas. Capt. Legate is the Duke of Rutland's Dr. R. Morehead Legate, Parrymore House, Paris, Ont., formerly of St. James, who will join his son in the near future. Their Charlottetown friends wish them a happy reunion after years of anxiety and absence.

The Duke of Gloucester, Australia's Governor General, left for Ottawa on Monday and returned to his home in Sydney, New South Wales, after several weeks' treatment with penicillin both for the injury, caused by a fall while riding, and for the eye trouble. The Duke and Duchess had to cancel an extensive tour planned for November as doctors ordered several weeks' rest, attributed to the strain of touring.

Baughman and his wife, the former Miss Rosemary Jeffries, whom he married in England a year ago. Since coming here Mrs. Baughman has been in every Province in the Dominion, and says she thinks the Island scenery equals the best seen in any of her travels, and is in many ways reminiscent of the English countryside. They plan to leave shortly for Halifax, where F/O Baughman is enrolled in the law course at Dalhousie University.

Mrs. Arnold Hattenbury arrived home Thursday from an extended visit with relatives in New York, Montreal and North Sydney.

Miss Lois Ford of the Provincial Secretary's Office left yesterday morning on a visit to Brockton, Mass.

MODERN ETIQUETTE

By Roberta Lee

Q. Is it all right for parents to discuss their children with others repeating humorous stories about them, and the like?

A. No; parents who do this become bores.

Q. Does it show good taste to use slang expressions?

A. No; it is not necessary and does not indicate the best manners. It is considered vulgar by some people.

Q. Isn't it ill-bred to discuss domestic affairs in public?

A. It is very ill-bred to do so.

Baking Fish

When it is desired that baked fish be particularly nice, try slipping two strips of clean muslin in under the fish before laying it in the pan. The muslin acts as a handle when removing the fish and will prevent breakage.

Hot Water Bottle

If the top of the hot water bottle will not turn, that the toothbrush through the loop of the stopper, and turn as you would a handle.

Chocolate Stains

To remove chocolate or cocoa stains from a garment, use borax and cold water. Soak the garment in the solution for a day.

Ranahan-McInnis Wedding Bells

The lounge of the Sergeants Mess of the R. C. A. F. Station, Sea Island, B.C., was the scene of a colorful wedding on Thursday, Aug. 30th, at 8 P. M., when the Padre, Plt. Lieut. Gilbert united in marriage Marjorie Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McInnis of Yank, B. C., and Sgt. Fred Ranahan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ranahan, of Charlottetown, P.E.I. The bride, given in marriage by her brother, was charming in a gown of white satin, with bodice of embroidered lace. She wore a coronet of orange-blossoms with fingertip veil, and carried a bouquet of tallgrass roses. Her only jewelry was a string of pearls. The bridesmaids were Miss Jenette McDougall, who wore gowns of blue and white and pink respectively, with hats trimmed with pink and blue ribbons. They carried bouquets of gladioli and sweet peas. The groom was attended by Sgt. Tom Parker as best man, and Sgt. Ashmore acted as usher. The wedding music was played by Sgt. Marjorie Ferris. The happy couple received their guests under a canopy of blue and white streamers and were the recipients of many beautiful gifts. A toast to their health and happiness was proposed by Squadron-Leader Miller. The remainder of the evening was spent in dancing to the music of the station orchestra under the direction of LAC. Bob Allen. A buffet supper was served later in the lounge. Sgt. and Mrs. Ranahan left by air for a honeymoon in California.

Dorothy Dix Says—

DIVORCE - PROOFING MARRIAGE

Written Marital Contract Would Promote Domestic Felicity

It has long been my conviction that nothing would do so much to promote domestic felicity and stop divorce as for every engaged couple to go to a good lawyer and have him draw them up an air-tight marriage contract in which it would be specified, in black and white, what each agreed to do and leave undone, and what each had a right to expect in a way that would be merely window-dressing, for of course, in the most important things in marriage, such as tenderness, understanding, sympathy, etc., there is no way in which husbands and wives can have the law on each other if they fall to live up to their agreement. No wife could get an injunction against her husband because his kisses had lost their pre-matrimonial luster. Nor could any husband collect damages from his wife by claiming that she had lost her willowy figure and gone fat on him.

MARITAL CRIMES ONLY BLUNDERS

Possibly matrimonial crimes will always have to be settled by the courts, but very few husbands and wives are cold-blooded villains who deliberately say each other's peace and happiness and wreck their marriages. Most of them are just blundering. They do not know their own minds. They are not aware of the things over which most husbands and wives fight—money, for instance. The bridegroom swears at the altar to endow his wife with all his worldly goods, yet innumerable husbands make their wives unpaid servants who never have a cent of their own. Couldn't it save a pair of friction if the wife could draw out her Bill of Rights and show her husband where he obligated himself to pay her a certain amount of money every month in return for her services, given and received?

And freedom. The curse of marriage is its lack of all personal liberty. Both husbands and wives feel that they have the right to impose all of their tastes and habits and likes and dislikes on each other. Friend Husband can't stay down town to have dinner with a friend without tears and reproaches from his wife. Wife can't buy a good hat without lying about the price. What a relief it would be to both if their marriage contract entitled each the right to a day off every week and a holiday from each other now and then.

And how many divorces would be saved if the marriage contract definitely limited the number of visits and length of stay of the respective in-laws, and if it provided that husbands and wives should treat each other with the consideration they would show a stranger, and if the wife would undertake to give satisfaction as a cook and housekeeper in order to hold her job, and if the husband would consider that his matrimonial partnership was as binding as his business one.

Of course, these things are all tacitly inferred when people marry, but it would certainly jock up many husbands and wives, who are wenching on their bargains, if they would read over their marriage contract now and then and see what they let themselves in for when they signed on the dotted line.

ELLEN'S DIARY

By an Island Farmer's Wife

It was hot again today, with a muggy air that for Julie and me discouraged so much effort. Earle before a sign of sunrise was on the move. He had planned to go to work even before that and wondered if we had better rise. "We have to go up the mill before it still repairs—and take them to the mill before we get together." After my visit to the city yesterday, I was loath to stir. At such times, James usually reminds me, only of course to recall my energy: "I never saw those who are always on the road, one bit of good around home!"

As much of a trouble as we found it to have the good day. Other chores than our own were given to Julie and me, so that until we came up from the mill while James was away, we were two busy people. I was obliged to go down when I became the shadow for Julie had taken some shadow for substance and consequently dropped her from sight. "Did you see Mr. C. (the miller) and a farmer from out the prov'nce?" Julie asked. "I saw Mr. C. (the miller) and a farmer from out the prov'nce?" Julie asked. "I saw Mr. C. ## Living & Leisure THE WOMAN'S REALM

I CLEAN MY HOUSE

Today I cleaned my house of all the dust of yesterday. I swept away unwanted things, including every foolish fear. I scrubbed the beauty of the past until it seemed to glow. And polished up the friendships I found.

I brushed so long ago. I brushed the cobwebs from the corner of my soul. To see if I could still behold the outline of my goal. I used the mop of honesty upon the floor of time. To wash away hypocrisy. And everything of grime; And when I'd finished with my room.

Each room was spic and span. And I had cleaned my house as well. As anybody can.

FIRST AID FOR FURNITURE

You can "heal" an ugly scratch that mars the surface of dark furniture by painting with Jodine. Make it invisible by swabbing the scratch with the sharp point of an orange stick, tightly wrapped with cotton.

Scratches on light-colored furniture—such as walnut or maple, can be toned down so that not even the gimlet-eyed will detect them. Simply rub with the meat of a walnut, pecan or Brazil nut, freshly cut out for easy release of both oil and stain, which are what you want from the nut.

ANGULAR TYPE

Suppose you are angular and thin. You can begin with wear fabrics of interesting texture and design that your sister of fuller proportions would not dare. You will keep in mind that a soft drapery in the right places has a softening effect of disconcerting angles.

The Columbia river is one of the finest supplies of pure cold river water in this continent.
