"THE GLORIA" LADIES READY TO WEAR

Amateur Glamour Girl

(By JOSEPH CHADWICK)

CHAPTER XVIII

When they returned to the hotel, Michael suggested going into the Terrace Room to dance. Tomia said she'd like that. She would, she thought, like anything that would stop Michael from being so remote. That kiss had changed him. He had been distant all the way home. The floor captain in the Terrace Room knew Michael. He said he was sorry there were no tables left near the dance floor, and showed them to one in a far corner of the crowded room. They ordered supper, then danced. Tomia, however, didn't enjoy dancing with Michael tonight. He was too remote. She knew he was thinking of that glamour girl, Patricia, and she hated Patricia. When they went back to the table, Jim Kirby appeared. He grinned at Tomia. "Hello — Sally," he said, giving the "Sally" a little emphasis. "Michael," said Tomia, "this is the Mr. Kirby I told you about. Tomia's friend. Mr. Kirby, Mr. Shane." The two men shook hands. "It was thoughtful of you to employ a detective to guard Miss Martin," Mr. Kirby said to Michael. "When does he report for duty?" "Tonight. He'll be here in a little while," said Jim. "I came over to ask you two to join Tomia and me at our table. She sent me." He grinned at the real Tomia. She hesitated an instant, then rose, realizing that Sally had put one over on her. "Thanks. We'd love to," she said readily. When they reached the other table, she made a face at Sally as she sat down. Sally smiled and murmured, "Imagination, my dear." She looked enchanting in a green dinner gown and, when Michael was introduced to her, she played the role of Tomia. Lane for all she was worth. She did such a good job of it that Tomia, feeling drab in her plain clothes in contrast with Sally's splendor, was keenly resentful. Sally had found charm somewhere, lots of it, and she was exerting all of it on Michael. She was clever, thought Tomia. Asking him about his work, about aviation. Then, Michael asked Sally to dance, and they went out onto the floor. "So he doesn't like glamour girls!" said Tomia, bitterly. "Not much he doesn't!" Jim chuckled. "She'll steal him right from under your nose, Tomia. That girl's smart. Where did you find her?" "At a rummage sale." "You two are going to fall out," he warned. "Two women can't be friends when they want the same man." Tomia drew a sharp breath. That was putting it bluntly. "Who wants Michael?" "You do, darling. You're falling in love with him," said Jim. Tomia looked at him in surprise. "So I can't fall in love? You finally admit it." "I mean you think you're falling in love." "Don't be ridiculous! Why, I hardly know that man." "You hardly knew David Warren before you thought you were head over heels in love with him," said Jim. He was laughing at her. She saw it now. He thought her a great joke. "It's easy to see," he continued. "This fellow flattered you by being interested when you had no glamour. He's not yet over David Warren. You're no longer heartbroken. That's right, isn't it?" Tomia silently considered this. Jim was right, she decided. She'd thought, after talking with Beth Harvey in New York, that her world had crashed. She had been desperately unhappy. She had felt more alone than she had ever felt in her life. Then she had met Michael—and David had ceased to be important. He was now merely a memory, like the other men with whom she had thought herself in love. "Yes," she said frankly. "I have not over David." She waited, expecting Jim to give her brotherly advice against falling in love with Michael. He always gave such advice when she fell in love. However, he remained silent. Tomia saw that he was watching Michael and Sally dance. He was smiling slightly, and she was surprised to notice that he was looking better than he had for some time. He hadn't the strained, nervous look that he usually had. He said abruptly, "Tony, I like that girl. She's good company. She's soothing. It does me good just to sit and talk with her." "Yes, Sally's a cure-all." "That's about right. Come to think of it, this is the first evening in a long time that I haven't had a headache. My nerves are relaxed." "Think of the money she'd save you in soap!" Tony said sarcastically. "Why don't you marry her?" Jim kept his eyes on Sally and Michael, out on the crowded dance floor. "Say, that's an idea!" he said. "Maybe I will!" Tomia stared at him. Jim Kirby falling for Sally! And out there on the dance floor, Michael smiling into Sally's eyes. She had a moment of panic. Her little scheme was backfiring on her—with a vengeance! (To be Continued)

MRS. ANNIE COOK SHEET HARBOR, April 7—Mrs. Annie Cook, a native of Charlottetown, P. E. I., and a resident of Watt Section Street, Harbor, for the past 50 years, died at her home on Thursday at the age of 80 years. Widow of Charles Cook, she was a staunch member of the Church of England all her life. Surviving are four sons, Charles of New Glasgow, Thomas, with whom she made her home, Daniel in the United States, and Aubrey A. H. Cook of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Halifax. The funeral was held on Saturday afternoon, and was largely attended by residents of this community by whom she was well known. Interment took place in the Church of England cemetery at Watt Section.

In Memoriam

Mr. FRANCIS MACINNIS It was with deep regret that his many friends in Cherry Valley and elsewhere learned of the death of Mr. Francis Macinnis who passed away at his home on the morning of March 28 at the age of 87 years. Mr. Macinnis was a successful farmer and while providing for a large family at the same time built up a very fine homestead. He was a member of the Catholic Church and a life-long member of the choir filling the position of organist for a great number of years. His wife, Teresa Hynes, and a son Wilfred predeceased him several years ago. Besides a large circle of friends there are left to mourn an affectionate foster five daughters, one son, Mrs. J. S. Horan, Mrs. J. Foley, Mrs. Richard Emerigit, all of Sask., also Emma, Lillian and Ernest at home. Friends from far and near came to pay their last tribute of respect to an honored friend and neighbor. The funeral was held at St. Joachim's Church, Vernon River where Requiem Mass was sung by Monsignor Maurice McDonald who also faithfully attended him during his illness. The following friends of the deceased acted as pall-bearers, Messrs. Leo Praught, Everett Dumphy, William Jenkins, Louis Sullivan, Truman Jenkins and George Irving. R. I. P. (Patriot please copy)

In Memoriam

MRS. NANCY L. TAYLOR MONCTON, April 7—Mrs. Nancy L. Taylor, widow of the late Samuel L. Taylor, died in Charlottetown at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Guy Dalling, Saturday evening at 7 p. m. Her death was a shock to her many friends, although she had been in failing health for some time and during the past week her condition became critical. She was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Stevens, who at one time resided in Moncton. Mrs. Taylor had resided in Sackville and Moncton practically all her life-time. She removed to Charlottetown last fall to spend the winter with her daughter. Her passing will be widely regretted for her kind character and Christian qualities won for her the love and respect of a large number of friends in this city, Sackville, Charlottetown and elsewhere. She was a member of the Anglican Church and was active in the various phases of church work. Mrs. Taylor, whose death was the first break in the family of the late Mr. and Mrs. Stevens, is survived by three daughters and two sons (The daughters are Mrs. Guy Dalling (Ella), Charlottetown; Miss Marjorie T. Taylor, Moncton, and Mrs. Gilbert Dawson (Muriel), Fredericton. The sons are Edwin S., of California, and Robert Alfred of Galt, Ontario. All the daughters were at the bedside when she passed away. The body arrived on the late Island train. Service was held in St. George's Church Monday at 4 o'clock. Burial in Elmwood cemetery.

Perfect attendance: Anita MacDougall, Margaret Boyle, Jean Pollard, Velma Frizzell, Mary Cavanaugh, Everette Boyle, Leo Cavanaugh, Lloyd Murphy.
