The Old Order Changes

By DAVID LYALL

With part of the uncanny foresight which is the heritage of some northern hearts, he was aware, long before the news came, that George had come over, and all the trumpets sounded for him on the other side.

Perhaps no one knew just what it meant to Robert Freeland. A man who, through causes generally beyond his control, has not been able to realize the best of his ambitions which are always secret and are part of the armour of his soul, invariably builds on his son.

Sometimes he is ruthlessly disappointed by the failure or the refusal of the lad to see eye to eye with him, or by his absolute lack of equipment.

It had not been so in the case of Robert Freeland and his son George. Far more than father and son, they had been friends and comrades in the most closest and intimate sense.

One letter, and one only, Robert Freeland had kept from the mother of the boy, because George had asked him not to show it. It was written in a shell-racked billet at midnight before the advance where he had paid forfeit with his life.

Only a few sentences from that precious missive need be inscribed here in order to accentuate the poignancy of Freeland's grief and loss.

"Whatever happens to-morrow, Dad, I want you to understand that I have no fear that the way is clear, and that you cleared it for me. There are fellows here who believe blindly in fate. Perhaps mine is the same thing, only my light is very clear and guiding. It's the light that will take me home. And you put it in my hands, father. If your next news is that I've gone west, you at least will be able to locate me. This is for your very own eye, not even for mothers. You'll understand."

Freeland had wept salt tears over these words; his strong crying in the night silence, in the safety of the mill, might have reached the stars. And then he put it all away deep in the innermost recesses of his heart.

George had written another letter on the same night to his mother, a gay, tender, inconsequent letter, in which there was only one small warning note.

His father's had been the real good-bye to the home where he had been happy; and the work which he had loved.

He had been Freeland's right hand, and having had the best he had now to content himself with the second-best.

He was very deeply conscious of it at the moment when Tom came in through the half-open dining-room door, a dusty figure with his motor-man's cap pushed far back on his dark hair, his face half-flushed, half-pale, his eyes full of the strain which comes of continuously exceeding the speed limit on the road.

"Hullo, Dad; thought everybody would have been in bed!" he said, trying to speak lightly. "Hope you didn't sit up for me. It isn't so very late after all, only ten to eleven. Half a mo, till I pull off my overalls."

He stepped back into the hall and was a few minutes there, the sound of his quick breathing breaking the stillness of the house. Presently Deborah came through the hall bearing a coffee pot, having, with the resources of her faithful kind, produced the needed stimulant at the psychological moment.

"Good old Deb!" Tom said by way of commendation. "Put it down there, old girl, and off you go to bed. Naughty boy, aren't I, and you're one of the best!"

Deborah departed with her short laugh which might have meant anything. Oddly enough she, too, contrasted him at the moment with the boy who had gone away. She would never carry child of her own on her breast had poured the treasures of her heart on George Freeland. She gave loyal service to all, because it was her nature, but she had only one shrine. Her master knew it, and it had made a strong bond between them. But they never spoke George's name to one another.

Divested of the overalls, Tom's figure in the suit of fine blue serge

To End a Cough In a Hurry, Mix This at Home

To end a stubborn cough quickly, it is important to soothe and heal the inflamed membranes, get rid of the germs and also to aid the system inwardly to help throw off the trouble.

For these purposes, here is a home-made medicine, far better than anything you could buy at 3 times the cost. From any druggist, get 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex. Pour this into a 10 oz. bottle, and add plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey to make 16 ounces. This takes but a moment, and makes a remedy so effective that you will never do without, once you have used it. Keeps perfectly, and children like it.

This simple remedy does three necessary things. First, it loosens the germ-laden phlegm. Second, it soothes away the inflammation. Third, it is absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly on the bronchial tubes. This explains why it brings such quick relief, even in the severe bronchial coughs which follow cold epidemics.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form, and known as one of the greatest healing agents for severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles. Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

Tom looked very slender, not to say meagre. His shoulders sloped and his face was sallow and unhealthy. He had light, rather hard, blue eyes, which had an odd way of never looking at you.

The intimacy of business had revealed to Freeland a singular shiftness in the character of his second son which often worried him. Tom would never be able, even if he succeeded to the business, to keep up the reputation of Coppets.

There was something the matter with his honour standard. He would go back on his word, or say he had never uttered it. To the elder Freeland that was the unpardonable sin. It had already made a breach likely to widen between them.

Brought to book regarding the barrier and the absence of real comradeship between them, Freeland might quite truly have answered that there was nothing in Tom to build upon.

Freeland had not said very much to him on this head because he was extraordinarily sensitive. He believed that this shiftness was an inherited trait. Time and again he had discovered and proved that Harriet's word could not be relied on. She was an opportunist, saying what suited the moment. It is an easy and light charge to bring against a human being, to call him or her an opportunist, but there are really few things more disastrous in life than absolute unreliability.

It poisons everything. It leaves the home life without floor or roof. As it concerns those whose brief fortunes we are immediately following, it was the cross as well as the curse of Robert Freeland's existence. Had he been one of the harsh, spartan old fathers, he would have beaten Tom's shiftness out of him in his callow youth, but he was not that kind of man. He had done his best, however, by precept and example, and had George lived, no doubt, he would have been able to influence his brother in a way no father, however wise and willing, could do. For youth calls to youth all the world over, and so the mightiest power operating in the lives of men.

"They seem to be desperate rides you're taking just now, Tom," said his father dryly. "You look dead beat. What pleasure do you find in them?"

"None," answered Tom unexpectedly, and sitting down at the table he attacked the sandwiches and poured himself a cup of coffee.

LENNOX ISLAND

The Christmas closing of the Lennox Island School was largely attended and enjoyed by scholars and parents, who show their keen interest in educational matters by daily driving their children into school from the more distant parts of the Island. The following excellent program was well rendered, after which the examinations were held, the pupils showing by their prompt answers the careful training they are receiving.

CITY SCOTTISH FOLK TO KEEP HOGSMANAY ON NEW YEAR'S EVE

TORONTO, Dec. 30. While Scottish folk everywhere observed in varying degrees the significance and festivities of Christmas they are eagerly awaiting Hogmanay.

Hogmanay—the last night of the year—is time when all true Scots gather and make merry into the wee sma' hours. In the Land o' the Heather across the sea they will assemble in thousands round town halls, where there will be sounds of revelry. Singing, shouting, skirling of pipes, the high-pitched strains of melodions and the screeching and crackling of fireworks will mingle in one triumphant pean of joyful acclaim. Carls, gaily bedecked with multi-colored paper streamers and laden with equally gaily bedecked red herring will attract large crowds of purchasers, for the red herring is surely a lucky gift to leave when "first-footing."

Others will take a diversity of gifts on these expeditions and will be seen laden with all sizes of parcels. The crowd will make merry and all the while watch the big hand on the town hall clock as it approaches the hour of midnight. Then, as the warning notes boom forth, there will be a hushed silence broken only by whippers here and there. And as the last notes of the hour fade into silence, the revelry will burst anew, swelling into a deafening but joyous greeting to the New Year, as wishes and salutations are exchanged. Then the crowd will slowly depart. Each party will wend its way to the homes which have to be "first-footed"

As many are doubtless aware, there are many little customs which are observed in connection with "first-footing." For instance the first person to cross the threshold of a home after 12 o'clock on Hogmanay must be dark, a fair person being unlucky. The person who is assigned or selected to act as "first-foot" must bring something to the home and leave it there. It should be a red herring or any gift. Should a person enter without a gift, it is said to be an indication that poverty will visit that home during the year. Should the "first-foot" enter unshod it is an omen of death, while one's insteps have also to measure up to certain standards.

It is deemed unlucky to allow a fire to go out on Hogmanay, while all visitors must partake of the hospitably extended in the homes visited. The tables are usually laden with cake, shortbread, nuts, apples, oranges, candy, ginger wine and ginger ale.

Persian Balm creates and preserves lovely and youthful complexions. Tones and stimulates the skin. Fragrant as a flower. Cool as mountain dew. Swiftly absorbed by the tissues, making the skin wonderfully soft-textured. Unrivalled as an aid to feminine elegance. Delightful to use. Imparts additional charm to the daintiest of women. Persian Balm is the one toilet requisite for the exacting woman. Peerless as a beautifier.

Marketing Your Silver Fox Pelts

I have just returned from attending the first Auction Sale of Silver Fox Pelts held in Montreal this winter by E. Rayner, Limited. I sold 98% of all pelts consigned to me for this sale. Checks and Account Sales have already been mailed to Shippers from my office at Summerside, thus giving Shippers practically cash prices with 20 to 25% advance over local buyers. I will be leaving here Jan. 3, 1931 to attend the above Firm's second sale to be held January 5, 1931. I attend to grading and lotting of all pelts consigned to me and to protect them in the Sale. My nine year's experience in handling and buying Silver Fox Pelts gives me a thorough knowledge of the different grades and values of pelts. Consign your pelts to my Summerside office or send direct my Montreal office, 456 St. Peter St., where your pelts will have the same attention as if you delivered them personal. Checks for pelts sold on this Sale will be mailed from my office, Jan. 10, 1931. If you require cash advance on your pelts I can arrange this for you. Bring or send your pelts to my Summerside office not later than Jan. 2, 1931 or send to my Montreal office not later than Dec. 31. It does not make any difference what Province you live in you will get the same attention as if you saw me personally. Reference, Bank Nova Scotia, Summerside.
