Central Calf Club Competition

The Central Calf Club Competition was held at Charlottetown in conjunction with the Central School Fair, on Friday, September 24th. Calf Feeding Clubs are organized under the auspices of the Live Stock Branch, Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa, and the Provincial Dept. of Agriculture. The objectives of the policy are to develop greater interest among young people in caring for, feeding and to develop the principle of community breeding. The Calf Clubs are supervised by L. W. Roper, Cattle Fieldman of the Dominion Live Stock Branch, and Stuart Wright of the Provincial Department of Agriculture.

The aptitude which has been displayed by club members in assimilating and absorbing instruction and ideas; the proficiency which they have gained in every Department of Live Stock raising the centralising and establishing of one breed of cattle in a district; the encouragement of better foundation stock in both females and herd sires, may be considered as demonstrating the soundness of the principles upon which the policy is based.

Attendance at the Fair was greater than last year. Many parents and visitors from the eastern and western parts of the province were in attendance, demonstrating the interest which Calf Club work is creating in the rural districts.

Great improvement is seen in the Calf Club work since the holding of the first fair in 1932. Several of the clubs are working in conjunction with the Federal Bull Leasing Associations and other organizations which are working for the betterment of the industry in their respective districts. Net assets of the composer, Theodore August Metz, were listed at $1,120, but the department entered a contested claim for $2,061, which it was said had been given Metz for relief. He died on Jan. 12, 1927.

Health
A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA
VARICOSE VEINS
The veins carry the blood from all over the body back to the heart. The blood current in the veins is much more slow than it is in the arteries, and from the lower part of the body, the blood in the veins is going up-hill.
Varicose veins are enlarged veins. They occur when, for one reason or another, the blood, instead of circulating freely, is checked to some extent and so is held back in the veins which become distended as a result. This occurs most commonly in the legs and in the rectum.
Anything which interferes with the flow of blood in the veins is a cause. Constriction of the legs by tight garters contributes to the condition. The pressure of tumours in the pelvis, or an overloaded bowel in constipation, and sometimes in pregnancy, may result in varicose veins. Certain forms of heart disease in which the flow of blood is not normal may also be a cause. If the tissues surrounding the veins are weak or of poor quality, the veins do not receive the necessary support and, in their weakened state, are apt to become enlarged. Overweight is a common cause because of the extra force required to send the blood through the abnormal amount of tissue. Long standing predisposes to the occurrence of varicose veins.
The prevention of this condition is, first of all, a question of keeping within the limits of normal weight and by having the muscles in good condition through regular exercise.
Varicose veins of the rectum, called haemorrhoids or piles, are usually the result of constipation. Prevention lies in the correction of the constipation by proper diet and exercise. The cathartic habit does not correct constipation; in fact, it is one of the most frequent causes of the condition, and so the habitual use of cathartics is indirectly a common cause of haemorrhoids.
Those who stand for long hours may be helped by lying down each evening and by having the legs gently massaged from the feet to the hips.
Once the condition has developed, relief may be secured through proper treatment but, in all cases, the cause of the condition must be removed. It is much more simple to prevent than to treat, and we would repeat that prevention lies in the maintenance of normal weight, in the development of healthy muscles and in the correction of constipation.

(C.P. By Guardian's Special Wire) BOSTON, Sept. 29.—Sponsors of the Indian Summer Cruise to Halifax and Charlottetown announced plans would be cancelled because of insufficient bookings on the steamship Evangeline. They had hoped to charter the vessel to make the voyage over the Columbus Day holiday. The proposed good-will cruise had the endorsement of the executives of the Canadian and Old Country societies.
