MR. TUFTS AT HUNTER RIVER AND CRAPAUD—Mr. R. W. Tufts, Chief Migratory Bird Officer for the Maritime Provinces, concluded his visit here last night by giving a very successful lecture at Crapaud. The previous evening he fulfilled an engagement at Hunter River when the hall was crowded, many failing to gain admission. Requests have come from other parts of the Province for Mr. Tufts' services, but unfortunately these cannot be granted for the present, as Mr. Tufts leaves this morning to fulfill engagements in New Brunswick. But he has agreed to return next May when another and more extended itinerary will be arranged.

MEMORIAL SERVICE—The annual memorial service under the auspices of the Cornwall-York Point Women's Institute was held on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 3rd. The weather being ideal a large concourse of people gathered and listened attentively to the able addresses delivered. After the decoration and singing of "O Canada" by the school children the chairman, Rev. D. K. Ross, led in prayer and then introduced the visiting speakers, Rev. C. E. Armstrong, Montague, and Rev. C. U. MacNevin of Georgetown. Both speakers sounded the note of "Memory" and paid ample tributes to those who had made the supreme sacrifice. The choir rendered suitable selections and were assisted by Mr. and Mrs. T. K. Cameron of Montague on the violin and harp. Worthy of special mention was the solo by Miss Vivian Armstrong and the duet by Mrs. Armstrong and Miss Vivian. Rev. C. U. MacNevin preached acceptably to an appreciative audience the same evening, taking as his text John 6, 9, "There is laid here." Mr. MacNevin is always welcome as a visitor and speaker in Cornwall.

ROSE VALLEY WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

The Rose Valley Women's Institute met at the home of Mrs. H. D. Dixon on Wednesday evening, Aug. 9th. There were eleven members and six visitors present. Meeting opened in the usual way. Roll call was answered by doing a stunt or paying a fine. The stunts provided were mirth provoking indeed, and each member bravely responded. The Sick Committee gave a clear report, no sick folk. A School Committee was appointed, Mrs. Jas. Todd and Mrs. J. D. Mathieson. A reading, "Being a Speed Artist," was read by the teacher, Miss Flora MacDonald, whom the Institute also welcomed as a new member. Business part of meeting closed by singing National Anthem. The programme consisted of a song, "Young Charlotte," sung by Mrs. Jas. Todd and daughter Ella. Mrs. H. D. Dixon, assisted by Mrs. Wm. Mathieson and Helen Mathieson, endeavored to read the fortunes of all present, which certainly turned out rather amazingly, and caused much merriment. Ice cream and cake was then served and meeting adjourned. The President, Mrs. J. W. MacKenzie, invited the members to her home for next meeting on Wednesday evening, Sept. 13th, roll call to be answered by hints on canning and preserving. Programme Committee, Mrs. J. W. MacKenzie, Mrs. J. D. Mathieson and Mrs. Wm. MacInosh.

Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Fyfe, 232 Hillsboro St., are leaving Saturday morning on an extended trip to Boston, New York, Washington and Chicago and will take in the World's Fair Exposition before returning.

Robots Exhibit Wizard System

TORONTO, Ont. Sept. 7—Emblematic of the wizardry of the age, two giant robots carry upon their broad backs an exhibit depicting the transportation and communication systems of the Canadian National Railways at the Canadian National Exhibition this year. The display is one well calculated to evidence the faith Canadians have in the future of their country and in the fine transportation network which connects every phase of industry with the markets of the world. A series of illuminated pictures portray the various activities of the Company in its transportation of Canadian trade, including the railway system, the Canadian National Steamships with its West Indies steamers and the ships of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, the Canadian National Express service and the Canadian National Telegraphs.

A unique feature of the telegraphs exhibit is the magnified sound made by the carrier current system, one of the latest developments in telegraphy. Each note represents a dozen messages being carried over the same wire. In addition there are automatic teletype machines which receive and despatch messages over the carrier current system. In a great illuminated map of Canada, lighted buttons flash at the principal cities emphasizing the web of telegraph wires which serve commerce by bringing the buyer and seller within a few seconds of each other and assist in knitting the country together.

The hotel system of the Railway is also shown along with the beauty spots of each province as tourist attractions and fine hunting and fishing grounds. There is an interesting collection of game birds representing specimens from coast to coast and a number of big game animals. The various centres of winter sports are also depicted.

IN MEMORIAM

MISS MARY ELIZABETH SMITH

On Monday, July 10th, Miss Mary Elizabeth Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Smith, formerly of Wheatley River, passed peacefully away in Charlottetown at the age of 26 years.

Some weeks before her death the deceased suffered from an attack of measles from the effect of which she never fully recovered. All that medical aid and kind friends could do was done, but all to no avail. On the above mentioned date her gentle spirit winged its homeward flight.

Miss Smith was one of a family of nine members. Of these five survive her. These are Donald, Fred, Russell, William and Laura. Two other brothers died in infancy and another sister passed away in 1908 at the age of 6 years.

The funeral was held from the Wheatley River Church and was conducted by Rev. F. E. Boothroyd and Rev. R. Hensley Stavert. The pall bearers were Messrs. Chester Rackham, John Ross, Alex. Ross, John Mobbs, Robert Mobbs and John McCormick.

Interment was in the Wheatley River Cemetery.

The Tragedy of Tolstoy

LONDON, Sept. 7.—(C.P.)—"The Tragedy of Tolstoy" by Countess Alexandra Tolstoy is thus dealt with by the reviewer of The Times Literary Supplement:

"The youngest of Tolstoy's daughters, the Countess Alexandra was more intimately associated with him in his last years than any other of his children. She seldom left Yasnaya Polyana, except in the company of her father; she was his principal amanuensis, at any rate among the members of the family, during the last four or five years; she was directly implicated in the final domestic conflict and, in furtherance of Tolstoy's wishes that his writings should become common property, was granted, under the terms of his 'secret' will, the copyright which his wife claimed and which his daughter was thus able to renounce; and she was with Tolstoy during his last tragic days at Astapovo. If a book of this kind had to be written—and the author, though well aware of its painful character, has been impelled by a sense of necessity—nobody is in a better position today than the Countess Alexandra to do justice to the facts.

"Tolstoy's daughter and her sister Tania, the latter her father's favorite, watched over him with selfless solicitude. Yet the Countess Alexandra records his jealousy and anger when he saw somebody courting one of his daughters. 'I was young myself,' he used to say then. 'I know how repulsive, how vile, the manifestations of passion can be. It is a disturbing explanation of his jealousy. He was in torment when Alexandra seemed to be falling in love with a doctor, and compelled her, by a show of possessive emotion, that one has little reason to admire, to dismiss him.

"The domestic conflict rages pitifully in the latter half of the book. There is no mention here of the chief intimate cause of grievance that Countess Tolstoy emphasizes so painfully in her diaries; and the omission must be taken into account in reviewing once again the entire unhappy history of the last years. We are told that the Countess Tolstoy deliberately erased all references to herself in Tolstoy's diary; and that act, symbolic of many others, must likewise influence our judgment. But perhaps the crucial thing in this version of the story, in which sympathy and imagination count for so much, is that, as the writer confesses very simply, she had no great love for her mother. Her sympathies all through were with her father and her father alone.

"Conscious even as a child of the rift between her parents—for Tolstoy was almost prepared for the 'leave-taking' as early as 1897—and witnessing the suffering of each of them, she seems instinctively to have sided with Tolstoy, regardless of his inconsistencies or her mother's distraught condition. The patience and meekness with which her mother bore a severe illness moved her profoundly, while Tolstoy, confronted with the possibility of the death of his wife, wept at the sight of the spiritual change in her—'wept, not with grief, but with joy,' seeing 'not an end of something but its full unfolding.' The exaltation of that mood is characteristic—but could egotism go farther? When, soon after, his daughter Maisha died, almost the only thought he could commit to his diary was his own sensations as she lay dying and his conviction that it was proper for him to feel serene, since death was an event entirely in the bodily domain.

"Countess Alexandra learnt that her mother was tampering with her diary, altering it and transferring entries from one date to another, that people who read it might believe that Tolstoy was 'a bad man, an egotist who shifted the whole burden of business, of the household and estate and of family affairs on her—and that she was a martyr.' Again her derangement must be pleaded in excuse. Tolstoy was always very anxious to screen her from blame, and as far as possible avoided complaining of her either in public or in private, with the result that many people have till now accepted her evidence as reliable, and judgment has often gone against him by default.

"Truly, Sofia Andreyevna, infinitely to be pitied, was at times mentally deranged during the last few years of Tolstoy's life, while Tolstoy for his part often bore with her with patience and humility. The doctors saw her, diagnosed hysteria and paranoia, and advised a separation. The Countess tore the portrait of Chertkov from her husband's study and placed her own there instead, then threatened to have Lev Nikolaevich certified mentally deficient if the publishing rights—for which she was offered 1,000,000 roubles—were withheld from her. That is only one side of her behavior, however, and, in view of the 'perverted Christianity' whereby Tolstoy gave proof of his love by seeming to thrust her out of his life, it is not unintelligible."

Hotel Changes

MONCTON, N. B., Sept. 8.—We have had a very successful season at Pictou Lodge and during the period the lodge was open it proved very popular with tourists, stated Mr. A. R. Bevan, the manager, who passed through Moncton last night on the Maritime express enroute to Ottawa after closing the season at this seaside hostelry of the Canadian National system on the south shore of the strait of Northumberland, near Pictou, Nova Scotia. Mr. Bevan prior to talking over the management of Pictou Lodge was attached to the Chateau Laurier at Ottawa. On the same train was Mr. J. O'Dowd, who for a time was relieving manager at the Nova Scotian Hotel at Halifax. Mr. O'Dowd is returning to Ottawa to resume the assistant management of the Chateau Laurier.

MARRIED IN HOSPITAL

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 8.—Society note: the bride was attired in a tea-rose nightgown with lace-cuffed sleeves and had a bouquet of tea roses pinned over her shoulder. Undaunted by an appendicitis operation, Miss Margaret Laux, of Westfield, N.J., was married today at the time she had set before she was stricken. Grill Williams, of Cranford, N.J., was the bridegroom who stood beside her cot in a hospital and nearby was her bridal party.
