THE PROMOTER'S WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

NEIL FORBIDS BARBARA TO VISIT HIS OFFICE AGAIN

CHAPTER XLVI.

I had waited nearly an hour before Neil came in.

"Hello, Bab! what are you doing here?" he greeted me.

"Oh I had the closed car for shopping, so I didn't mind the rain, and I wanted to surprise you, but I thought you'd never come. I want to talk to you."

An expression of annoyance crossed his face.

Without saying much about spending, I let him see wherein we could save without being unduly inconvenienced. I noticed the frown on his face but kept on.

"Where did you get that economy bug I haven't stinted you in any way, have I. I wish you'd let me run my business as I see fit. Economize—now!" he said the last two words so low I scarcely caught them.

Just then my eye caught the blotter.

"Oh, Neil! what in the world did Mrs. Orton give you such a big check for?"

"What are you talking about?" he asked, but I noticed a change in his expression.

"I opened the table drawer, thinking I would clean it out nicely for you. I found that blotter, and tried an experiment I had read about—just to pass the time. I held it before the mirror and the writing on the check, signature and all, came out very plainly."

"A regular Sherlock Holmes, aren't you?" he sneered.

"I told you I did it only to pass the time. Don't be nasty about it. But, Neil dear, tell me what it means? Such a large amount, too."

"I told you once, long ago, that Mrs. Orton owned stock in some of our companies."

"Is she still interested?"

"Yes."

"I see this check was made about the time that horrid Mr. Scott was here and soon after Mr. Orton died."

"You are very observing. Again you are using Sherlock Holmes methods, I presume."

"Aren't you going to be nice and tell me something about your connection with Mrs. Orton? If you don't, Neil, just as sure as I live I will go to her. I have been put off just as long as I intend to be. I am your wife and I have a right to know."

"You meddle in my business if you dare! Mrs. Orton saved me when Scott threatened me. She loaned me the money to buy back his stock. Now are you satisfied? If you are, I will take you to the car." He was livid with fury.

"I am not satisfied, Neil, because you have not given me your confidence. But I know now that my intuitions have been right. There is something about your business that is not clear to me. Why should Scott threaten you? Why should you borrow money from a woman? I thought banks accommodated business men if their methods were honorable. Or that other business men would do so. You say this check was loaned money. You have also told me she was interested in some of your companies. How else are you entangled with her? Was she finding fault with the way you handled her money, the other night—Or what was it?"

I saw I had "hit the nail on the head," as father used to say. She had been ragging him about her money. I wanted to say more, to find out more, but Neil was so terribly angry with me, standing with his hand on the door-knob and that look of uncompromising anger on his face, that I simply walked out.

"There is no need for you to go down with me," I told him.

"I will see you to the car. After this you will cease your visits to my office."

On the way home hot, scalding tears fell, not because of Mrs. Orton, but because of the way he had told me not to come to his office.
