Witchcraft No
Fraud in Bavaria

(Canadian Press)
OGGLESBEUREN, Bavaria June 27.—Bavarian courts have been handling a case in which real estate dealers were charged with having defrauded a farmer and his wife, by representing that their house was haunted and their en-tire farm bewitched, thus buying the place far below its value and reselling it at a great profit.
Johannes Krautmann and his wife were the complainants, but were unable to get redress in the courts. They testified that had they known the truth, they would have sold the place for nothing.
Their cows gave little milk and died, and none of their animals flourished.

BODY FOUND ON SEA SHORE

The body of an unknown man was found yesterday morning lying on the shore below the farm of Mr. Daniel MacRae, Tea Hill.
Coroner Dr. Houston and Stipendiary Magistrate Martin, who were notified, decided, on viewing the body, that no inquest was necessary.
There was nothing found by which the remains could be identified and owing to the advanced state of decomposition it was impossible to tell accurately the age of the deceased man.
The remains were buried in Sherwood cemetery yesterday afternoon.

Action of Lieut

victory of yesterday is of far greater significance to all churches of this country than is at first apparent. Independence of both parliament and churches have been vindicated. Representatives of the people have set at rest anxiety everywhere felt least parliament should treat one of the uniting churches in a manner different from treatment of other churches. The action of parliament puts the formal consummation of union in the near future beyond the realm of doubt.
Great disappointment is expressed by members of the Presbyterian Association over the outcome of the long struggle but they point out that only a preamble of the bill has been adopted and content that passing of this legislation does not stop litigation instituted and also that unionists have yet to run the gauntlet in Ontario, Quebec, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia legislatures.
Antis are challenging the constitutionality of the bill and this question they say has yet to be decided by the courts.

Mayor Davis admitted he had been requested to enforce the ordinance but sidestepped direct action by saying that a conference with the city attorney first would be necessary. The antique ordinance, which is No. 7127, reads as follows:
"Dressing like the opposite sex. Section 20. For any person dressing himself or herself in the garments of the opposite sex and thus appearing in any of the streets or public places in this city, shall upon conviction be fined not less than $5 nor more than $50. Passed Feb. 16, 1870."

London Bridge is Far From Falling

(Canadian Press)
LONDON, June 27.—London bridge, which children for generations have been tuncfully proclaiming "is falling down" is not doing any such thing.
The bridge is still standing and this year celebrated its one hundredth birthday. It has withstood a century of traffic and shows no signs of cracking under the strain. However, this is not the bridge about which the song was written; the original wooden bridge having been destroyed.

Japan Must Trade

less transportation cost than from America or Europe. So Japan has this field grabbed. But Japan grows no cotton. She must have a low-grade, short-staple, fairly cheap priced raw cotton from which to manufacture the cotton cloth. She can buy that sort of cotton in only two places—British India and the United States. The total production of British India, even if Japan had every pound of it every year, would be less than half the amount Japan must have. There's only one answer—lose business or buy from the United States.
2. The United States buys considerably more than half of Japan's raw silk—the biggest raw material money crop of Japan. The United States buys practically all of Japan's exportable tea and takes large quantities of Japan's camphor, toys, curios and art works.
3. Other countries cannot or will not buy Japan's raw silk and tea. The British prefer Ceylon, Chinese India or other teas. The other European countries—except Russia—don't like little tea, but what they do drink is not Japanese because they dislike the flavor. England and Europe get their silk from Italy, France and China. The Chinese silk is cheaper than the Japanese, and the Italian and French silks are already in Europe when the worm begins to work. There are no ocean-freight charges half way around the world on that silk. Furthermore the manufacture and use of "artificial silk" are increasing in England and Europe. On top of all that no people have the "silk complex" so extremely as the Americans, and no people have the money to gratify that complex so generally as the Americans. Most dockworkers and day laborers in Europe can be perfectly happy without silk shirts and pyjamas. So there you are. The one big crop Japan has to sell is raw silk. Now and always she has sold the bulk of it to the United States. There is no chance of her selling much of it to anybody except the United States.
4. If the United States ceased to buy Japan's raw silk, tea, camphor and some other items, Japan would have no money with which to buy raw cotton from the United States. If Japan had no United States raw cotton, she could not manufacture cheap coolie cloth to sell throughout Asia. These two items—selling raw silk to the United States and cotton cloth, made from United States raw cotton, to Asia—compose two-thirds of the total of everything Japan sells abroad. Money does not grow upon bamboo trees in Japan. There are no gold mines, coal or oil deposits—no natural wealth. The only way Japan can have money is to sell stuff abroad. Japan has to have money or go bloopy. Deprived of the sale of silk and coolie-cloth,

Wife of Former Kaiser is Ill

(Canadian Press)
BERLIN, June 27.—News has reached the German monarchists that the wife of the ex-Kaiser is lying seriously ill at Doorn, having been confined to bed for the past fortnight with articular rheumatism, accompanied by high temperature, and heart weakness.
It is believed that she contracted the illness during long motor-car journeys on her recent visit to Germany.
Japan has on hand a large amount of gold that she accumulated during the war when she dominated markets formerly held by Germany and the Allied nations, but that they could not supply because of war conditions. During those war years Japan's exports exceeded her imports—that is, she sold more than she bought. She saved money. Constantly since the war this has been reversed. Her imports have exceeded exports. She is buying more than she sells. That means she is digging into the old stockings—spending, slowly but surely, her accumulation of gold. With that gold gone, and with the United States ceasing to buy silk from Japan and to sell cotton to Japan, that country's place in the sum would become a blank. Every Japanese diplomat knows these facts. Japan's foreign policy is based thereon. Every Japanese diplomat also knows, and most of them will admit, that unless and until these facts are changed there can be no war between Japan and the United States, because Japan would be ruined, win or lose. Her economic and commercial structure cannot stand without close and constant relations with the United States, and such relations can scarcely be maintained during a war.
