THE ROPE OF PEARLS

An hour had passed. The two candles on the mantel were still projecting their pale sheen across the floor. Alexander Ferryman, alias Doctor Moffett, occupied a chair at the window. He was a gloomy, silent man, and his hands and feet were bound with curtain ropes. Facing him sat Axelson, equally silent and gloomy, his hands and feet similarly tied. And in a room on the upper floor Joan of Arc was a prisoner behind a locked door. The ferocious Caesar had been chained to a tree outside.

"The door opened and Dale walked in. He had removed the trappings which, in the deceptive green light, had given him superficial resemblance to Mr. Castle. He dragged his feet a little, an unusual thing for him to do, and his head was a trifle bowed, as if weighted down with perplexities. "Did you get Captain Summers?" Adele inquired. "Summers?" Dale looked up and blinked his eyes, as if slow to understand. "Oh, yes. He growled like a bear when I got him out of bed. I had to say the same thing over six times before I could make him understand that I am ready to make good my promise to deliver the murderer of Miss Conway into his hands."

"He gave a tired laugh. "Poor Summers! Even now he half suspects that the Piaroon is up to another trick. But he will come. He really ought to be here in an hour." She scanned his face in the dim light of the candles. "What else?" she inquired shrewdly. He gave her an uncomprehending look. "You were gone over half an hour," she pointed out. "It didn't take you as long as that to telephone Captain Summers."

"No, it didn't," said Dale reluctantly. "I had—er—a few other things to attend to. I stationed Bilkins at the gate to see that no undesirable persons get in till Summers arrives. Oh, I forgot to tell you. I didn't bring any policemen with me, but I brought Bilkins. It was he who set the gong in motion and fired the shots. Bilkins can make as much noise as a regiment. Best of all, he does as he is told without asking questions."

"S he smiled a little. "Yes, you telephoned Summers and placed Bilkins at the gate. What else? I can tell from your looks that there is something more." "Yes, there is." He seemed reluctant to proceed. "I also telephoned for a doctor."

"Gorgeous!" he said softly. And then his lips twisted into a comical smile. "They are the same ones, of course. It was very cleverly arranged, Moffett. And it was one of the finest compliments I have ever received. You wouldn't have gone to such lengths unless you had been very much afraid of me."

"I was," Moffett grumbled, and there was a glint of genuine admiration in the hateful gaze he fixed on Dale. "I think I understand Summers was searching the house. You placed the pearls in the aperture in the wainscoting, knowing he would find them there. Then, very deftly, you worked his mind around to the point where he was ready to accept the idea that they had been left there by the murderer and that the murderer would come back for them. So you and Summers went to work and baited the trap. You were in no danger of losing your pearls for the house was being carefully watched. But tell me this, Moffett. The trap was set for me, of course, but how did you know I was going to walk into it?"

"You did," said Moffett with a shrug. "But how did you know?" Dale insisted. Moffett grinned insolently. "Remember that talk we had in the library of my house? You came there to inquire for Dr. Moffett." He chuckled contemptuously. "I knew then that you were the Piaroon, but I didn't let on that I knew."

"And how did you know?" "I had known it for a month." There was a trace of malicious glee in the doctor's voice. "You visited my house one night—in your role of the Piaroon, of course. You didn't find anything of particular value, and so you went away, thinking that your visit had passed unnoticed. It hadn't. That night you were followed to your residence. A simple process of putting two and two together made it evident that Martin Dale was the Piaroon."

Mr. Murdoch Ross, Tallor, wished to express his sincere thanks to all those who so kindly assisted him during his recent fire, especially to Chief Ranaghan and the whole Fire Department and Chief of Police and force; also George Cadmore, Tallor, for the use of his store, and the Diamond Brothers who so kindly volunteered to help carry out the stock. 7408-8-20-11.

LOUVAIN LIBRARY RESTORED

Emerges From Ruin More Important Ever

BRUSSELS, Aug. 13.—When the Louvain Library was destroyed by fire in August 1914 during the German occupation, it contained some 380,000 volumes including 1,500 incunabula and several hundred manuscripts from the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, valued more than a million dollars. Today it has been completely restored and in some respects is richer than before.

By virtue of the Versailles Treaty, the Germans promised to restore the library's contents and since the armistice they have restored a total of 300,000 volumes inclusive of 600 incunabula and 300 manuscripts, including one of the eleventh century. A further 300,000 volumes have been assembled by private contributions from Great Britain, the United States, France, Canada, Poland, Holland, Sweden, Czechoslovakia and China.

The British contribution, with 55,000 volumes, is far the most important, the next numerous being that of France with 33,000 volumes. The Japanese contributions alone are worth two million yen and include a Buddha manuscript on parchment from the ninth century. The American contribution includes the curious collection of Miss Minn of Boston which is constituted entirely of books relating to death.

Miss Minn, aged 85, had since her childhood bought all books dealing with death and one-half of this collection she offered the Louvain Library. One of these books is a splendid prayer book of Henry III, King of France and Poland. As to Germany's contributions they were gathered by means of a credit for four million gold marks opened by the German Government in behalf of a committee established at Leipzig to the effect of buying up all available books that were asked for by the Louvain Library University, who had sent in a list of 30,000 volumes that were to be found on the library stacks before the war. Most of these 30,000 volumes were gathered from 87 German private ### libraries, it being understood that Germany would have to provide for these insofar as they were unduplicated in the German libraries.

Thus the Louvain Library has emerged from the ordeal richer than it was ever before, the United States having provided for a library building which is the most up to date in Europe, and Germany together with the allied and neutral countries having filled the stacks with an almost unique collection of rare books and manuscripts.
