IN MEMORIAM

MRS. DANIEL KELLY

On January 19th, 1944, the Angel of death entered the home of Daniel Kelly of 22 Cedar St., Haverhill, Mass., and took from it the soul of a devoted wife and mother. Through her long illness of six years, medical skill failed to restore her usual good health and energy.

During her illness, as months passed into years, her spirit grew detached from earthly cares, unable to attend to household duties, which she loved so well, she showed unfailing patience, and resignation to the divine will which proved a solace to her devoted husband and daughter, who so faithfully ministered to her every need, and her peaceful passing was a consolation.

The deceased whose maiden name was Katherine Flood, was born at Maplewood, P. E. I. The daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Flood, she was educated at the community school at Kelly Cross and lived during the early years of her life, in the home where she was born, a home, and parish of Kelly Cross, for which she cherished many happy memories.

In April 1902 she married Daniel Kelly, a friend of her childhood days, and lived at their home at No. 22 Cedar Street Haverhill, Mass. until her death.

Her Requiem Mass was offered at St. James Church, Haverhill. The church where she was married almost 42 years ago. Her remains were laid to rest in St. James Cemetery. The services at the grave were conducted by her pastor, besides her sorrowing husband there are left to mourn, one daughter, Helen M., teacher in Haverhill. One of a family of twelve, which she left to cherish the memory of a dear sister. Two brothers James W. and Frank J. Flood of Kelly Cross, and four sisters, Mrs. Mary E. Hogan, Brookline, Mass.; Mrs. Theresa McGinn, Fredericton, New Brunswick; Mrs. Mary E. Murray, Charlottetown; Mrs. Dan Malone, Charlottetown, P. E. I. The esteem in which she was held bore testimony to her large heart. The beautiful flowers and spiritual of ferns, telegrams and letters of sympathy bore silent and affectionate esteem to her memory. Her bearers were her husband's six nephews, James E. Kelly, Jr.; J. Harold Kelly; Thomas A. Kelly; William H. Kelly; Bernard Kelly; John J. MacDonnell, Jr. May her soul rest in peace.

WHERE GULLS BREAK GREETINGS

As they approached the rocky coast, flocks of screaming gulls rose in clouds, wheeling and darting in a manner that suggested they were rarely disturbed. There was a kind of natural harbour, towards which the seaman made. "We bring the mails each fortnight," McEvers remarked. "And always when we need replacements." Judging by the boxes and sacks to be unloaded there was little likelihood of starvation. A two-roomed house of rough-hewn native stone assured shelter from the elements. For fuel there was driftwood and some logs to provide logs. He had few of the lesser luxuries of civilization.

When the motor boat finally chugged away and he was left to his own devices, he had momentary doubts as to the wisdom of his choice of life. At least a fortnight must elapse before he could even the homely features of McEvers and Ogilvie. If it became necessary to remain longer period would intervene.

Dismissing such thoughts as foolish, he began unpacking and setting the house in some sort of order. With precious books on the shelves, a lamp burning after dark, and a fire crackling in the open hearth, he recaptured the dreamy mood which had become second nature.

Neener and regulations, governing his task of warden, to be committed to memory, and the duties called for considerable activity.

Morning brought unalloyed delight. Mellow sunshine pierced the early mist, the sea was calm and a mill pond, and he was fascinated by the graceful evolutions of the skua gulls.

"I'm going to have a private heaven," he said to himself.

But that was on the first day of awaking, before he could possibly know that the place would fall to five minutes of inspection. He was to learn that for a man in search of solitude, Ovarn lacked the elementary qualifications.

The first intimation came during the afternoon. Hugh was gazing idly out to sea. All at once his attention was riveted on a dark object moving slowly in the distance. Snatching up his binoculars he focused them and made out the form of a rowing boat, of all things.

What in the name of wonder was anyone doing so far from the mainland in so frail a craft. Perhaps he came from another island in the vicinity? Yet the nearest of these was seven or eight miles, and he had been assured that they were all uninhabited.

Neener and nearer came the cackle-shell. Now he could see that there was a simple occupant pulling rhythmically at the oars. Stormy was an expert. Also, he knew where to come in.

Hugh proceeded to the cove, wondering what was the correct greeting to an unexpected visitor. He watched the man unship the oars, step ashore, and tip up.

"Oh, hullo!" he said catching sight of the warden of the solitary sanctuary. "Beautiful day, isn't it?" Hugh Eversard gasped, and nodded dumbly.

CHAPTER III

INTRUDER NUMBER ONE

The stranger walked up the beach, holding out his hand in a gesture that was fantastically reminiscent of H. M. Stanley on the point of saying, "Dr. Livingstone, I presume."

Contenting himself, instead, with a prosaic "How do you do. My name's Ambrose. Martin. I reckon you didn't expect to see me, did you?"

"Frankly, I didn't expect to see anyone," Hugh Eversard retorted.

"Just as it was such a delightful morning for a row that I took the old tub out, got in a wrong current, and was carried out to sea."

"Where from?"

"Castaway. Small pleasure resort, you know?" Hugh replied. "Wasn't it rather a long way to drift?"

"Fifteen miles, at a rough guess. Now I'm practically exhausted."

"Better come into the shack and have something to eat."

The invitation was gratefully accepted. From the way he ate, it seemed that his tale might be substantially correct. But Hugh did not like the look of the fellow. For one thing he was gaily-eyed. For another he talked too much.

"For an old 'un," he jabbered, "I can hold my own. Well in the first, let me tell you. However, I'm unable to handling a bit."

"Apparently it didn't prevent you getting drift."

"Ah, that was the contrary current offshore. Another brought me up against your island. I'm grateful for your hospitality air. Now it is time I was on my way."

"Surely you don't propose rowing back to-day against—er—those currents?"

"No, likely! The village pub will meet my requirements for the moment."

"How likely?" Ovarn isn't a tourist centre," he explained. "We don't boast a hostelry."

"In that case one of the villagers. I happen to be the sole inhabitant."

"Really? Then I am on the horns of a dilemma. Would it be trea-

passing on your kindness unduly if I begged a shakedown overnight?"

Primitive impulse was for a gruff refusal, but Hugh was still too civilized to speak his mind. It would be a bit thick turning him loose without adequate rest. Although the man remained calm, a storm was always likely to spring up. His conscience would never be clear if the man perished as a consequence of churlishness.

Martin noticed his hesitation. "Of course," he said, "if I'm a nuisance I'll look among the rocks."

"You're welcome to the sofa."

"Thanks a million! By the way you aren't a Scotsman, I take it?"

"Does it make any difference?"

"Certainly not! Merely idle curiosity. I'm English myself. That's why I wonder what you were doing in this desolate spot."

"I like it here."

"Somewhat bleak in the winter?"

"Next year at this time I'll be able to tell you better, Mr. Martin."

"Oh! I get it! Nor had a spell of bad weather yet. This part of the coast is rather notorious, you may have written your book by then."

"What book?"

"Mr. Martin grinned. "Guessing air sort of place to compose a novel?"

"My occupation is that of warden of a bird sanctuary."

OUR SOLIDARITY BOYS

O Canada! We stand on guard for thee.
They do not sing but guard the liberty.
From east to west her youth To fight for Freedom they are true.
Courage volunteers they come For the hazards of fierce combat.
On land and sea and in the air The enemy they fight, and Laura to win you never fail.
On Tunisia, and Sicily— You have fought for the Nation's liberty.
Alas! that you should strive and bleed In foreign lands for victory's prize.
In sorrowing mood your loved ones mourn.
For those who never shall return Unremembered their loss must be.
But sacred is their memory, You won Montgomery's peace.
For bravery in sanguinary days You gave your lives, but not in vain.
In losing life you won your share again.
The forgotten dead love's tears.
