

Mickey ROONEY

"I hate to admit it but, Tom, you're a fool!" said Tom Edison's father.

True... YET MORE EXCITING THAN FICTION!

You've known him as Edison the genius... Edison the wizard... Edison the world idol! Now meet Edison, the friendless boy... who was the laughing stock of his own home town! Mickey in the blue ribbon performance of his whole exciting career... as the great Thomas Alva Edison in the hectic days when he wouldn't give his father's razor strap a chance to quite cool off!

"He's not a bad boy. It's just something inside of him struggling for expression!" said Tom Edison's mother.

"Gaucho Serenade" Stars Autry With Splendid Supporting Cast

The Gaucho Serenade, latest of Republic's Gene Autry westerns which opened last night at the Capitol Theatre for a three day run, lives up to the high standard Republic has established for these Autry pictures and in fact, established a new high.

Each Autry picture seems better than the last, and this reviewer is amazed at the plot ingenuity and production skill of each succeeding film in the series.

Smiley Burnett displays his comedy talents to excellent advantage in "Gaucho Serenade" and June Storey was never prettier or more capable than in her present role of Joyce, the rich girl who rebels against marrying a man she does not love.

Clifford Severn, an appealing mopey, acquires himself well as "Roy" the little English boy who would become a nation for misdeeds of a gang of crooks were it not for the vigilance of Gene and Smiley.

Smith Ballew, long a favorite, is excellently cast as "Buck," the cowboy sweetheart of the eastern city girl, who eventually gives up the range to become a movie cowboy.

The supporting players, all of them splendid in their roles, include Lester Mathews, Joe Crehan, Wade Boteler, George Lloyd, William Ruhl, Hank Warden, Frank Meredith and Harry Strang.

On the railway station platform at Republic's Gene Autry westerns which opened last night at the Capitol Theatre for a three day run, lives up to the high standard Republic has established for these Autry pictures and in fact, established a new high.

until the milk supply ran out. Then for food.

Soldiers on the way to the front looked at the emptied food wagons with spontaneous grief. With their regular ration and a few small luxuries given them by their families, and gave them up for the refugees. There were pots of honey jars of jam, long sausage rolls, cakes, tins of sardines, butter condensed milk, bars of chocolate which passed to the outstretched hands of the refugees. One child plunged its fist into a pot of honey and licked it hungrily. Some were famished, even voracious.

Hunger slightly satisfied, tongues were unloosed. "The bombardment — I saw those dropping like flies — the parachutists — the miracle we experienced — a babble of confusion and bewilderment, impossible to separate the true from common, almost insane fear.

With 12 Grands

One old lady caught my eye. She held her head proudly and there was not a suspicion of a tear. With her were her 12 grandchildren, each with his rucksack. "My daughter, wounded and my son, refuses to leave his land," she said.

"The German planes skimmed the roof of our train—the roar was deafening—it is only a miracle we've escaped," said a priest. "Since we have been having mass by candlelight and hallicinations. The children hear airplanes—some of the children take convulsions. But the majority are admirable just the same."

Now an avalanche of enquiries about lost children, lost mothers, lost homes. The train prepared to leave for another part of France.
