Education Should Be Nourishing and Digestible

by ALFRED MAAS
HAMILTON, N.Y., Nov. 28—(CP)—Dr. George Barton Cutten, native of Amherst, N.S., the Yale football centre of 43 years ago, still loves the sport and presides over a vigorous athletic lay-out, but he won't attend games played in the $100,000 plant.
The 65-year-old president of Colgate University won't permit even his love of football to interfere with what he considers a more important matter—the building of a better and stronger university, as a contribution toward a better and stronger world.
The ruddy-faced and outspoken apostle of "rugged individualism" and the "special advantage" of scientific success the hard way, has no quarrel with those who delight when strong squads of "red raiders" ravage the ranks of opposing football forces.
For a long time he was an insatiable fan at Colgate games. "But I stopped going," he explains, "because I love the game too much."
Dr. Cutten's life is dedicated to successful execution of his emphatic educational theories. He is the father of the "Colgate plan" by which a student surveys the fields of general knowledge for two years, then concentrates as a junior and senior on one chosen field of learning.
In brief, he says "a student's college course should have a point. It ought to drive at the mark like a spearhead and not scatter the target like chaff from a shotgun. The target should not be a college degree but a life career."
The Colgate president believes in practicing what he preaches. He is a business man, college president, expects to work for what he gets, and insists everyone else, including his students, should do the same.

The "Colgate man" is his effort to prevent students from "wandering through the college curriculum." It is not aimed at a life of college ease for Colgate men. Dr. Cutten thinks there is no sense in making education too palatable, but that it should be more digestible and nourishing.
The Colgate board of directors can't let you know he applied his "business before pleasure" technique to administrative problems.
Eighteen years ago, when Dr. Cutten came to Colgate from Acadia University in his native Nova Scotia, the Chenango Valley school had operated for 30 years with yearly deficits of from $22,000 to $60,000. Today it has cash resources of $2,000,000.
Dr. Cutten explains his formula in few words: "We merely spent a little less than we took in."
In 18 years under the college business plan, Colgate has accumulated scholarship funds of more than $1,235,000, and others of about $750,000. The school has erected six buildings worth $1,500,000, introduced pension and insurance plans for the faculty, and limited enrollment to 1,000 men after a 50 per cent increase.
Dr. Cutten won't admit he's impressed.
"I know a lot of businessmen who think not only that I'm no businessman, but also that I'm no college president," he says.
He works at a neat desk in the homey two-story brick Colgate administration building, whose mid-Victorian window arches and squat roof stand amid the grandeur of the university's buildings as a reminder of Colgate's small beginnings. His silver hair glistens above a strong, ruddy face. He invariably wears a suit of hard-finished grey cloth and a knitted black bow tie with slant-own ends.
His hands are big, brown, strong, as they were 43 years ago, when

King to make Statement on War situation

OTTAWA, Nov. 28—(CP)—Prime Minister Mackenzie King told the House of Commons today he proposed, before adjournment, to make a statement on the present war situation.
He was replying to Conservative House Leader Hanson, who declared that the war situation at the moment seemed "more serious than at any time since the fall of France."
Mr. Hanson also referred to the report brought back to the United States by Lord Lothian, British ambassador to Washington, on the financial condition of the United Kingdom. He said the Prime Minister should make a statement on "just what the situation is," based upon official information available to him.
In particular, Mr. Hanson wanted to know "what further assistance in men, material and money Canada can give."
Mr. King said he had it in mind to make such a statement. He agreed the situation was serious but from his private knowledge of what was transpiring he believed the reports in the newspapers were giving an accurate picture.

7 Canadians on R. A. F. 53rd Casualty List

LONDON, Nov. 28—(CP)—Seven Canadians were among the casualties named in the Royal Air Force's 53rd Casualty List issued tonight.
They were:
Killed in action—
Po. Dr. R. Allen, a native of Ontario whose mother lives in that province.
Po. Clare Arthur Haynden Connor of Toronto whose father, Arthur Connor, lives in Toronto. (Po. Connor awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross Sept. 28 for flying a blitz bomber over to hit R. A. F. base after a bombing raid.)
Sgt. E. Kenny, born in Ontario. (His father lives in that province.)
Wounded or injured in action—
Capt. T. A. Atkinson, born in Ontario, father lives in Victoria, B. C. Missing and believed killed in action.
Sgt. J. A. Selley whose father, W. H. Selley lives in Brampton, Ont.
Missing—
Po. Norman Hart, a member of the Royal Air Force's Canadian squadron, who was born in Montreal.
Po. R. C. Eason of White Horse Yukon territory, whose father, Arthur Eason, lives in Seattle.
Air Marshal Owen Tudor Boyd, deputy commander in the middle east, was listed as missing and believed a prisoner of war.
(The 51-year-old vice-commander has been reported an Italian prisoner of war, after making a forced landing in Sicily.)
The list contains 64 names including 35 killed in action; 96 killed on active service; 35 previously reported missing now presumed or reported killed in action; four previously reported missing now presumed or reported killed on active service.

More than 1,000 cases of attempted suicide were taken to hospitals in Shanghai, China, in the last year.
They were snapping footballs back from centre to Yale quarterbacks. All Dr. Cutten will say about his athletic career is that he had a carbuncle in his neck "as big as my fist" all season.
He has made his keen absentee interest in sports fit in with his idea of education. The new athletic plant has 15 playing fields. Under a program of "athletics for all" 1,000 students will participate in 24 intramural and 11 varsity sports.
"College athletics are like democracy," the doctor asserts. The cure for its disorders is not less of it, but more. We not only say the same thing about athletics here but proceed to apply the remedy."
He hastens to add, however, the program "athletics for all" is in no sense aimed at intercollegiate sport. "We have no inclination," he adds with amazing understatement, "to deprecate a successful season of our football team."
For relaxation, Dr. Cutten writes and collects old American silver teaspoons.
His contacts with Colgate's 1,000 students, he says frankly, are perfunctory.
"I like to know them all," he says, "but that's impossible, of course. The situation reminds me of the California college professor who had to give it up because every time he tried to learn and remember the name of every one of his boys, but he had to give it up because every time he remembered the name of a student he forgot the name of a friend."
