Queer Gifts as Wedding Presents Dorothy Dix More Valuable Than Gold

If We Could Give Common Sense, Patience, Understanding, a Sense of Justice, Rich, Indeed Would be the Newly Married Couple

These are the days when it seems as if all the nice boys and girls we know are getting married, and when we are haunting the shops trying to find some gift to send them that will be a token of our affection and not the ninety-ninth duplicate of something that ninety-eight other bewildered friends have bestowed upon them.

Of course we all end up by giving them the traditional silver or glass or china wedding present, but how often we wish that instead of loading them down with another dozen spoons for which they have no use, or a clock that is just exactly like the one Aunt Susie sent them, or the bric-a-brac that they will hide in the darkest corner of the top shelf of the hall closet, that we could endow them with a few intangible things that would be worth more to them than anything that is ever sold over a counter, and that would be a comfort and a blessing to them as long as they live!

Suppose, for instance, we could send John and Mary, with our best wishes for a happy marriage, a large supply of COMMON SENSE. Wouldn't that be more valuable to them than a set of hand-painted dinner plates? And more needed? For common sense is a commodity that a bridal couple rarely possesses, yet it is the one thing that a boy and girl starting out to live together need more than anything else on earth.

For, if they had good, hard, horse sense, they wouldn't expect too much of marriage or too much of each other, or even too much of themselves. They would take marriage on the chin instead of winning over it and throwing up their hands and quitting when things got rough. They would accept each other "as is" instead of trying to make each other over. And they would make the best of their bargain and get a lot of happiness and content out of marriage.

Suppose you could send Sam and Isabel an exhaustless amount of PATIENCE. Wouldn't that fill a long-felt want in any bridal flat or bungalow and do more to make it comfortable than if you piled Persian rugs on the floor and filled it with down-stuffed divans? Just think how much friction, how many quarrels, how many heartaches, how many estrangements and divorces would be saved if a young husband and wife could be patient with each other's faults and peculiarities, and just wait until they had time to adjust themselves to each other and learn how to keep from stepping on each other's toes.

And just suppose that on their wedding day we could give Tom and Martha UNDERSTANDING. It would be far better for them to be given the key to each other's hearts and souls than to be given the key to a new home. Half of the matrimonial misery is caused by husbands and wives never really getting acquainted, never coming to know each other or to see beyond the surface of each other's natures.

The practical man who toils like a slave to support his wife and give her luxuries doesn't understand that the reason she is peevish and fretful and discontented is because he never tells her he loves her, or pays her any compliments. The domestic woman who keeps her house as clean as a pin and feeds her husband on Lucullan feasts doesn't know that the reason he goes off after another woman is because he is heart-hungry, not stomach-hungry.

And suppose you could make Bill and Nancy a bridal present of a SENSE OF JUSTICE AND A WILLINGNESS TO GRANT EACH OTHER A REASONABLE AMOUNT OF PERSONAL LIBERTY. Of course, they wouldn't just one person now with everything in common, and weren't they just perfectly sure that neither one would ever have a thought or desire except for the other's happiness?

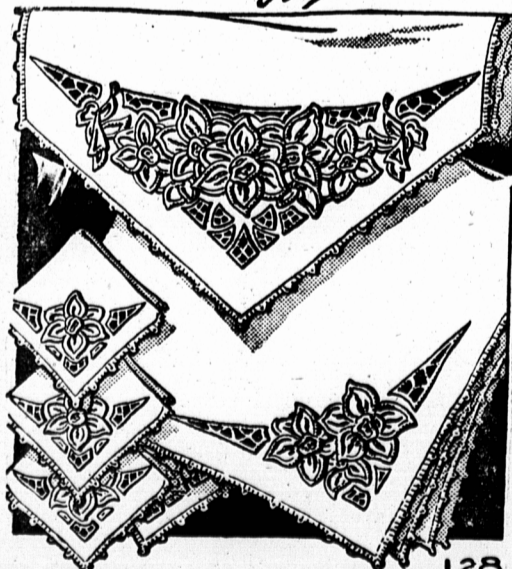

That is honeymoon stuff and it vanishes with the honeymoon. In real life there is nothing that rankles so in marriage as injustice, and nothing that makes men and women jump the bars so often as the knowledge that they are virtual prisoners. It would save a lot of bitterness, or a scandal and divorce, if a young couple would start out, by playing the game fairly and squarely with each other, and if they would grant each other the privilege of being individuals as well as husbands and wives.

And finally, and above all, the most precious gift that could be made to a bridal couple would be A CAN OF FOSFOOT SOAP, with instructions on how to use it without stint in greasing the domestic wheels. There would never be a creak if the young husband told his wife every day how beautiful she was and how much he loved her, and if the wife got out the lube and plastered it over her lord and master. What a pity that we can't give bridal presents that are really worth while.

The HOUSEWIFE and HER ACTIVITIES

Thy lordly genius blooms for all to see On the clear heights of calm supremacy: My humbler down they only find who pass With eyes that search for violets 'mid the grass. —Paul Hayne.

SANDALS ARE POPULAR FOR SUMMER WEAR

Toeless, flat-heeled sandals in gay colors promise to be popular again for the holiday season, and it is possible to obtain models allowing a maximum of air and sunshine, yet supporting the arch of the foot. Finest suede is used with lace elastic gussets for special occasions.

FLUTTERING SASHES

Even tailored dresses are wearing belts of sash variety with fluttering ends.

EVENING MAKE-UP DELICATE AND FRESH

Until you get a coat of tan, evening makeup for summer dinners and dances ought to be as delicate and fresh looking as your frothy gowns and filmy wraps. Besides, since the majority of evening parties will start before it is dark or even darkish, real evening make-up will be out of order until dinner is well under way. Better start out with a carefully applied medium amount of rouge, just a suggestion of mascara, smooth layer of powder and the right quantity of lipstick. Be sure your purses contain dry rouge which matches exactly the cream variety on your cheeks, powder and mascara.

When dinner is over and darkness has fallen, smooth on more rouge, re-powder and apply a fresh layer of lipstick. No need to remind the truly fastidious that these neat little jobs should be done in the dressing room—not at the table or on the sidewalk.

ALL TYPES OF JEWELS IN MODERN COLLECTIONS

The twentieth century finds the joy and love of collecting precious jewelry as strong and alive as it was in ages past. Modern collections sometimes embrace all types, or they may be limited by the collector to historical or contemporary jewelry or to unset gems.

DON'T DRESS FOR DINNER

The short-skirted afternoon dresses in black with touches of gold or silver are smart in Paris. They are termed "don't dress for dinner" gowns.

WHITE FLOWERS GIVE COOLNESS TO ROOM

White flowers give a room a crisp-looking, cool summery air. Try white gladiolas in a crystal vase, geraniums in a pale rose one which blends with the spots of rose-red in their centers or lovely dead white snap dragons in a gleaming blue crystal bowl. White rose buds with long slender green stems give any room a de luxe appearance, regardless of the season. White roses are a summer room what caviar is to the canapes. If your budget is more limited than your taste and imagination, you can work out charming effects with white daisies, geraniums or petunias.

LINEN SUITS IDEAL FOR SUMMER WEAR

For the next few months linen suits will be all the rage. You will see them in town, in the country, on seaside promenades, and on upper decks of liners.

Specially treated uncrushable linen is used, and also a variety of weaves with slub or tweed effects, but with the cool, fresh crispness that is the fashion-right of linen. Some coats will severely tailored into the waist; others are cut away with a man's morning coat severity.

You can have short coats or three-quarter ones, cut with a box-like straightness with epaulettes or padding to give a tailored squareness to the shoulder line.

A Morning Smile

JUST CURIOUS

The village fire-engine was careening toward a small hamlet. Suddenly a hefty housewife left a group of her cronies and, dashing into the middle of the road, waved her arms frantically in front of the oncoming engine. The driver pulled up with a jerk. "Where's the fire?" he shouted. "Well, that takes the cake," retorted the woman. "That's what we all want to know."

A NEW EXCUSE

"Norah, why haven't you brushed down that cobweb?" "Cobweb? Lor', mum, I thought that had something to do with yer wireless."

Some linens are plain, others are striped or flowered. Sometimes the coat and skirt contrasts in color or tone. With a little ingenuity as much change and variety can be introduced into a linen suit as into an afternoon dress. Pale tan is a favorite shade, so is green, also the deeper shades of blue. Elf caps or broad brimmed sailors offer a field of choice in hats. The carrot and sunglow shades in stockings seem to carry all before them. There is to be a golden glow around our ankles this summer, so let us do it quickly and see that the seams of our stockings are never crooked.

The home garden is no friend of the beauty specialist where complexion is concerned, scientists tell us because the properly balanced diet containing vitamin and mineral fresh vegetables will give nature its chance to do what was intended, bring health to the body and with it, a good complexion.

Vegetables are not the only foods to produce such results, of course, but they are the "deficiency" types which supply the hidden food elements lacking in so many other modern table delicacies. The fact that they are grown at home and can be used fresh from the garden without the loss brought about by being kept out of the ground, makes them doubly valuable for the health and complexion seeker.

OLD FURNITURE

The ingenious housewife can do a lot to modernize old furniture. Even some of the most "hopeless" pieces can be revamped. One home owner redecorated her home and then went to work on her furniture which had been purchased in the era when the value and style of a piece was judged by the number of curlycues it boasted. A dining room suit was redecorated to match a room in which the empire period predominated. The furniture was painted black and the carvings which sandpaper could not eliminate were painted gold. The result was unexpectedly attractive.

If your beauty budget is limited get one cream, one lotion, powder, rouge and a lipstick, then learn to supplement these with home treatments, using items from the kitchen cupboard. Oatmeal and egg masques, lemon juice and other homemade bleaches, ice water—these and many more too are not only simple to use but really efficacious.

Tip was sputtering with rage. "Every worth-while race I've seen for ten years," he said, and if that race was on the square—I know Dixie Gordon—"snapped Duke, "and find out how badly Kelly's hurt. Pretty tough for that little guy—an accident like that can wreck a man's nerve." "What do you mean accident," said Tip, one foot already out of the box. Why don't they let that Dixie Gordon ride with a machine gun?" There was a flare of a trumpet, a call of attention. The announcer was at the loud-speaker. "Ladies and gentlemen—the there was no sound from all the thousands who had been cheering or talking excitedly a moment before—"The decision is that Television, ridden by Jockey Dixie Gordon is the winner!" "For Gawd's sake," exploded Tip, as he hurried from the box and ran toward the ambulance. Carol and Duke were alone in the box. In her excitement she had tossed her bag and her fur scarf in a corner. When she had retrieved them and was ready to leave, she saw that Duke was looking at her intently. "Well, he said, you've done it again. I didn't think even Dixie Gordon could bring Television in ahead."

So you still believe in your law of averages? "I'll go to my grave, saying that you can't handicap luck." "They saw Tip coming back to the box and waited for him. He was shaking his head sadly. Kelly will walk again—his shoulder's broke. What a lousy break for what a swell guy." "He'll ride again, won't he," asked Carol. It would be too terrible to think of never seeing Kelly on a horse again. Of all the jockeys, Father ever knew, Kelly was his favorite. What hospital have they taken him to? I want to see Mrs. Kelly, even if I can't see him." Duke was thinking for the second time that she was the daughter of Jim Clayton. Tip, too, was impressed by the obvious sincerity of her sympathy, but he would not show it. "Well, Miss Clayton he said, it looks as if today puts you right into your wedding veil, doesn't it?" "Yes, said Carol and neither of the men noted the strange voice in which she said that one word. She was wondering what she could do. Now that she had made the $76,000, there was no reason for any further association with Duke. But she couldn't face the thought of not seeing him, not being with him day by day, as she had been now so many months. If only Blackamoor had won, she would have had a few more days of grace. But now, what excuse would she have for not leaving the tracks forever? It was too ironic, she thought bitterly—she had hated Duke and now she loved him; she had wanted to marry into society and now—she could not keep her promise to marry Hartley Madison. Duke was watching her face, so expressive, yet so unreadable. He saw that she was not altogether happy, but he thought that was because of what had happened to Hand-Riding Kelly. Suddenly, she smiled at him.

known that he had no reason for being jealous, but as has always been the way with jealousy, it had no relationship whatever with reason. In person, answered Duke. Won't you join us?" Kiffie, dear, cooed Fritzie, drop your nonsense—we three have something important to attend to. "What's the use of having me in I—never can get on to your racing talk and I'd hate horses even if they didn't give me hay fever." Well, said Fritzie, glancing around the car, I can't see any horses in here. And whether you understand all we say or not, we want you here. Kiffie groaned. How much he wondered, would this conversation cost him? Look, Fritzie, Duke returned to the matter in hand, fingering the telegram. If you want to cinch the Hopeful, there's one sure way to do it. "Which is—?" You know who's sitting up there? That's the answer—Dixie Gordon. He's free-lancing, you know. Put him on Lightning. Of course. Oh, Duke, duck, what would I do without you? And why didn't I think of that? Isn't he awfully rough put in Kiffie. "Rough enough to win," said Duke. Fritzie was one for direct action. "Oh, Dixie," she called out. "Come over a minute, won't you?" "Don't know why not," he answered, leaving his table for their. "Have you met Mr. Kiffmeyer, my fiancé?" she asked. "Well, you've met him now. Sit down. That out of the way—tell me, have you a mount for the Hopeful?" "Oh," said Dixie in an airy manner, if you mean have I decided—no, I've had offers, of course. The last one was for five grand." Kiffie was so overcome he gasped instead of sneezing. "We'll give you six to ride on horse, Lightning," said Fritzie. "I've been reading the paper about Lightning," said Dixie. Well, said Fritzie, handing him the telegram, complete your education by reading this. "Looks like a good mount. Would you place a side bet a twenty-five hundred for me?" All right, said Fritzie, paying no heed to another gasp from Kiffie. O. K., Dixie rose and held out his hand to shake on the bargain. "You mind putting that on paper? Just a minute, cut in Duke. Dixie measured him with a long cool insulting stare. Not at all, he said, then turning to Fritzie. But it will be for ever and I'll write it down. (To be Continued)
