SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON III. OCTOBER 16.

THE LAST JUDGMENT.

Matt. 25: 31-46.

GOLDEN TEXT.

"Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these, my brethren, even these, ye did it unto Me."—Matt. 25: 40.

POINTED SUGGESTIONS.

By Rev. D. W. Snider.

How frequently the lessons during the past months have constrained willing lips to say, and have been sufficient to compel those of the unwilling to admit, "Truly, Jesus is the Christ, Son of the living God!" The present lesson is of such a character. There is but one alternative: Jesus is exactly and absolutely what He claims to be, or He is not. Let it be written blank. No one cares to fathom such a depth of infamy.

And if Jesus is what He claims to be, why should anyone seek to minimize or pare down or shade away the full force of the supernatural in His words and works, where no other explanation can as fully or as reasonably meet the case?

Foreknowledge belongs to God, and everything has been taken into account. Those who have never sinned are provided for, and those whose lives have been a humble, helpful ministry are admitted to share it eternally—place, and privilege, and enjoyment forever; eternal reward.

Those who have revelled in sin and whose acts have been one long disobedience, are likewise provided for. And those whose lives have shown a blindness to compassion, while proudly asserting that they have been wide-awake and on the look-out to do the right thing to the right person, are sent to share such provision eternally—a place of wrath, forever. Wrath to come! Eternal punishment!

The reward of the righteous and the punishment of the wicked is in each case a surprise to them. The surprise of the righteous is the creature of his sense of unworthiness, while that of the wicked is born of his feeling that he is entitled to the best. The first benediction of the Sermon on the Mount, and the fundamental of Christian character becomes increasingly important, in the light of such a fact: "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

The judgment of the righteous as well as of those who are separated on the left hand, depends alike upon the doing of things which can be done—the things which are close at hand. Every one has a neighbor, but every one is not a good Samaritan.

Compassion; the compassion of a brotherhood which is a brotherhood indeed, is the keynote of the kingdom.

The choicest discipleship is that which is so complete in its consecration that what it does is the effort of a life which is abandoned to the good. The individual act is, therefore, not a matter which the memory would seize and retain. It is simply one of a series, and of a series which is so continuous that they become a flow. Such may be said to be unconscious discipleship.

There is foundation for the opinion which is offered that the judgment portrayed in our lesson is not that of those who have known or heard of Jesus, but of those who have never believed on Him because they have never heard of Him. It is well, therefore, to study the passage in the light of the teaching of Jesus which is found elsewhere, as, for example, John 3: 17-19.

If such is the judgment of those who have not heard of Jesus—"of the nations"—what must that be of those who have heard and disobeyed? Let us not fall through unbelief as the Israelites, who, for that reason, could not enter into Canaan.

"You should send an inspector down to see what's the matter with this man's meter," said the cashier in the gas company's office to the superintendent.

"Oh," began the superintendent, "we throw complaints about meters."

"This is no complaint. He sends a check for the amount of his bill, and says it's very reasonable."—Tit-Bits.

PUTTING HEART INTO IT.

That Lowell was altogether right when he said "The gift without the giver is bare" we all admit in a general sort of way, and yet, in our time of giving, we often fail miserably in living up to the ideal which his statement suggests.

If that offering conveys to our friend in some subtle yet unmistakable way, some thought of our understanding and appreciation of him, if we put into it something of ourselves, our own taste, our knowledge of what he would like, our heart sympathy for his tastes and needs, it is a real gift, otherwise it is not, any more than if he had picked it up with his eyes shut from a pile upon the counter at the department store. It is the heart that is in it that makes it worth anything. Indiscriminate and wholesale giving is an altogether empty and senseless thing.

And we can take this same thought into all the relations and duties of life, and we will find everywhere that it is the heart we put into our service that alone makes it really worth while. Life has many hard lessons, but the hardest of all is the lesson of love, but if we fail to learn that lesson the failure is a fatal one. We have beautiful dwelling places, with every comfort and convenience in them, but unless each inmate makes his or her contribution of love and sympathy and real fellowship to the common stock it can never become a genuine home.

Selfishness spoils the home, as it spoils everything else, and the failure to love is the greatest of all failures, there as it is everywhere else. Self is the greatest gift that we may give tither to our fellows or to God, but it is the offering that seems hardest for us to make. And when we have learned to put our heart into all the relationships and duties of life we have learned life's greatest and best lesson.

WHAT A JAPANESE WIFE LEARNS

A Japanese wife is more than a wife. She is an artist in the most difficult of arts—and the most useful—the art of handling men. It is the consuming ambition of her life. For it and in it she lives.

The women of Nippon are not notably attractive in either face or figure. She suffers a severe handicap in comparison with English and American women. Therefore she does the next best thing—she displays policy. I believe your word for it is tact.

Of the women of Japan there is one, just one, opinion among her judges—especially among her foreign critics: As a wife she is all gentleness and loveliness. This is quite remarkable, coming from men of the world around. Whatever may be their criticisms on other things, they are all praise for the Japanese woman as a wife. There is a reason; there are more reasons than one.

In the first place she is a past mistress in the art of commanding men, only in her case it is no longer an art—it is second nature with her. The basic, elemental qualification of a great commander of men, East and West, is and always has been this—to know how to obey. Everybody knows that. Greater than he who saw St. Helena after seeing Austerlitz, the Japanese woman acts out what she knows—what she knows so well and has known so long that she is no longer even conscious of it.

MIGHT BE TRUE.

Mrs. Neighbors—"They tell me your son is in the college football team?"

Mrs. Malaprop—"Yes indeed!"

Mrs. Neighbors—"Do you know what position he plays?"

Mrs. Malaprop—"I ain't sure, but I think he's one of the drawbacks."

GALLANTRY OF AN OFFICER.

Particulars have come to hand of a brave rescue by E. W. Jones, second officer of the S. S. "Elswick Tower," who, at Savona, in June last risked his life in rescuing a fireman of the vessel. It appears that the fireman was proceeding on board the steamer in an inebriated condition, when he fell from the ship's gangway into the harbour. Mr Jones hearing his cries jumped overboard to the rescue. The man was very difficult to handle in the water and Mr Jones had an exciting struggle with him for fifteen minutes, when both were picked up and the fireman was brought on board in an unconscious condition. The Captain of the steamer, Captain H. Byers, reported this act of heroism to the imperial Merchant Service Guild, who at once interested themselves in the matter, the pleasing result being that they have now received from the Royal Humane Society their Bronze Medal together with a Testimonial on Vellum signed by the Duke of Buccleuch as Vice President of the Society in recognition of Mr. Jones' bravery. The Guild are hoping to arrange for a public presentation in due course.
