KRUPP'S AND THE NEW SIEGE GUNS

By Norman Draper in Collier's.

GERMANY'S FORT REDUCER.

To the trust the Empire has placed in the horde of workers at Krupp's, which has been faithfully kept by them, many of the successes of the German army are undoubtedly due. Consider the new siege gun.

This ponderous weapon has been the one big surprise of the war in Europe. Its action and effects have startled every ordnance expert on the face of the earth. It has completely revolutionized the science of making war.

Nations have expended billions in construction of fortifications. The most expensive materials have been used. Cost was not considered. Men have made it their life's work to construct fortresses that were in their time considered impregnable. And as long ago as 1855, when the majority of the so-called modern fortifications before such cities as Liege and Namur were completed, they believed that that end had been attained.

The best of the fortifications scattered throughout Europe are constructed along similar lines. As an example, one of the Turkish forts on the Bosphorus, was built from the identical plans used in the construction of one of the forts before Liege. Now money spent in erecting such forts is considered as good as lost. The day of the fortress has passed; the new siege gun is responsible for the passing.

MAKING THE DESTROYER IN SECRET.

It has been repeatedly asserted that no nation has any military secrets that are not in the possession of other important nations, but events have proved that this terrible weapon was most certainly an exception. Only a few high German army officials had heard of it. There are members of the Reichstag who voted the money to construct the first gun who until this day are ignorant of its nature.

The first one was built five years ago at Krupp's. It was tested on the proving grounds attached to the plant. These grounds cover an area 4 kilometers in length and 2 kilometers in width. They are used for testing and experimental firing of all kinds of guns built at the Krupp plant, for tests on armor plates, deck plates for the shields on the carriages of field guns, powder and various varieties of high-powdered explosives, and for bursting trials of gun barrels and projectiles. In 1909 35,000 rounds were fired at the Krupp proving grounds. Thousands of men were working there every day. And every day they saw the new siege gun being tested.

When after a period of experimentation, it was determined that the gun was a success, other similar weapons were being fired. Every employee of the plant knew something about the guns, and fifty thousand men at least have seen one or more of them in operation during the last five years. Each man, apparently, has held the secret in his breast as though it were his own.

A member of the Reichstag, in a Berlin newspaper of recent date, discussed the secrecy that surrounded the making of the siege gun as follows:

"The fact that the German army possessed such a gun was as much of a surprise to the Germans as to foreigners, for its construction and nature were kept secret, as the situation demanded, so that even in the Empire only a limited number knew about it. When the trials were finished and all were ready to begin the construction of the new gun, the problem presented itself of making this wonderful work of war without attracting attention.

"More than forty officers participated in the preliminary discussion over the preparation of the military budget for the construction of the Budget Committee of the Reichstag. When the subject of arms was reached, the head of that department requested that this part of the budget be not debated at that time. At the close of the session he told me confidentially that a new siege gun was in consideration. The General Staff, he said, had urgently requested that not a word be said about the matter in the Budget Commission. Not even the officers, they declared, knew what was being done."

THE EVOLUTION OF THE SIEGE GUN.

In view of the important part this siege gun has been and is playing in this war and will play in all wars in the future, a description of it and its evolution out of the Krupp shops was of 11-inch bore and it was known as the 11-inch howitzer. When it was fired the recoil was so great that the gun was torn from its position and hurled 100 feet away, where it landed half of itself in the earth. Ordnance experts of the German Army, constantly on duty at the Krupp plant, accordingly set themselves to work to find an effective method of reducing the recoil. Their efforts finally produced a pair of hydraulic tubes, which were placed along the barrel of the gun. A mixture of glycerin and water was prepared for the tubes, and the barrel of the gun was fitted to them in such a manner that the recoil was taken up by the glycerin and water as it was forced through a series of vents inside the tube the instant the gun was fired. Gravity forced the mixture to flow back to its normal position after the recoil had been entirely taken up where it was ready to absorb the shock of the next shot.

The recoil eliminated, vast possibilities were opened. The caliber of the gun was increased by three inches. With a 14-inch bore the gun was also a success. So the bore was increased again. It then measured 16 inches. But the rifle and its attachments were so heavy (they weigh forty tons) that every time it was moved on its carriage, when the ground was damp, the wheels sank in several inches.

Prior to that time an officer in the Italian army had invented what the world now knows as caterpillar wheels. These were placed on the heavier pieces of field artillery belonging to the Italian army in order that the gun might be moved over swampy land. The Germans accordingly adopted the Italian plan and made caterpillar "feet" that could be attached to the wheels of carriages made to transport the big siege guns. In addition, many complete caterpillar wheels were made. The "feet," however, were different from those of the Italian caterpillar wheels in that they were constructed of a fibrous composition, reinforced with strips of steel.

From that time on the siege guns could be dragged by horse or traction engines over any but the most marshy land in Europe.

PICKED APPLES WITH MEAT

Sweet pickled apples are something of a novelty and are delicious when served with meat.

Select rather tart, well-flavored apples and cut in half cutting through the stem and leaving the skin. Stick three cloves in each half apple.

Make a rich syrup, allowing three pounds of sugar and a pint of vinegar to six pounds of apples. Boil the apples in the syrup and simmer until they can be pierced with a straw. This pickle is delicious served with pork.

Doing is the great thing. For it, resolutely, people do what is right, in time they come to like doing it.—Ruskin.
